

CONTENTS

PREFACE	xi
I. INTRODUCTION: The Mishneh Torah in the Life and Work of Maimonides	1
Maimonides' literary oeuvre: unity and diversity	6
Three sources of information: introduction to the Commentary on the Mishnah ; responsum to R. Nehorai had-Dayyan; introduction to Sefer ham-Miṣwoṭ	7
Centrality of the Mishneh Torah	14
His accounts of the purposes and features of the Mishneh Torah	20
Seven statements: Sefer ham-Miṣwoṭ ; Mishneh Torah ; letter to R. Phinehas ben Meshullam; letter to R. Jonathan hak-Kohen of Lunel; letter to R. Joseph ben Judah; treatise on resurrection; anonymous apologia; references in the Moreh Nēbūkim	24
Five major characteristics	48
Sources of the Mishneh Torah : erudition and originality	49
Motives and goals of the Mishneh Torah	61
Historical motive: response to contemporary need	62
Literary-systematic motive: jurisprudential need	74
Philosophic-ideological motive: rationalistic-spiritual need	77
The mid-twelfth-century scene: institutional-religious-literary realities; five salient features	81
History and halakāh: on the study of the Mishneh Torah	92
II. FORM	97
Anonymity and authority. The purpose and value of codification: brief, uniform, undocumented norms	97
Reactions to the Code: stricture and supplement	102
A second look: exceptions to the austere codificatory form	108
(1) Attribution to original authorities, anecdotes and quotations	109
(2) Original views, personal preferences, autobiographical statements	116
(3) Multiple opinions	121
(4) Variant customs	124
(5) Value judgments: counsels of perfection	134
(6) Pedagogic devices: direct address, introductory generalization, exempla	135
The impossibility of absolute finality	139
The Code as commentary: expository-exegetical material	143
Maimonides' redefinition of a code: role of theoretical knowledge and explication	165
Maimonides' mēleket šamayim : rigidity and resilience	170
Appendix: Examples of expository-exegetical material	176

III. SCOPE	188
Comprehensiveness of the Code	188
Restricted scope of study	192
Halakic pragmatism and spirituality	195
Maimonides' intellectual breakthrough	204
Motives for the unification of theoretical and practical	208
Unity of all learning	215
The historical dimension	220
Temporary laws	229
Omissions	234
IV. CLASSIFICATION	238
Options for classification	238
Mishnaic-Talmudic sequence	238
Listing of commandments: the Sefer ham-Miṣwoṭ approach	245
Independent topical-conceptual arrangement	254
The fourteen books of the Mishneh Torah	259
Novelty of this classification	273
Conceptualization and classification: splitting of halakic units	276
Stresses and strains in this system	281
Differences between topical-conceptual and philosophic-teleological classification	300
Internal sequence and classification	308
Problem of contradictions	311
Appendix: Relationship between the classifications of the Mishneh Torah and the Guide	321
V. LANGUAGE AND STYLE	324
Three options	325
The missing option: Arabic	333
In praise of brevity	337
Exceptions: cases of amplification	339
Precision and elegance	346
Other features: synonymy, symmetry, neologism	349
Stylistic continuity and consistency	352
The successful fusion of content and form: literary features and codificatory needs	354
VI. LAW AND PHILOSOPHY	356
Complementarity and reciprocity of halakah and philosophy	359
Maimonides' continuous preoccupation with Rabbinics and metaphysics	365
Philosophy and law in the Mishneh Torah	371
Ṭa'āme ham-miṣwoṭ in the Maimonidean oeuvre	374
Proofs that commandments have reasons	374
Philosophic proof: wise=good=purposive	378
Exegetical-historical proof	380
Novel Maimonidean interpretation of Deut. 4:6	385

Are the reasons for the commandments knowable?	387
Should the reasons be investigated and discovered?—dangers of antinomianism	391
Reasons for the law and mysteries of the Torah	397
Should knowledge of the reasons remain esoteric?	400
Reasons—absolute or relative?	401
Ṭa'āme mišwoṭ and polemics	403
Reasons of the law in the Mishneh Torah	407
Mē'ilab , viii, 8: a mandate for inquiry	407
Tēmurah , iv, 13: the mandate repeated and applied	415
Widespread emphasis upon teleological role of mišwoṭ	418
Differences between Mishneh Torah and the Guide	430
Concern with ethical perfection	440
Socially-oriented explanations	443
The unity or duality of Maimonides' teaching: contradictions or divergent emphases	447
Attitude toward asceticism	459
Overt acknowledgment of elitism	468
Other features: explanation of decrees	471
Interpolation of ḥokmah	473
Attitude to "popular religion"	479
Personal-philosophic inclinations and halakic formulations	485
Philosophy as an integral part of Talmud	489
Nobility of philosophical knowledge	500
Conclusion	507
VII. EPILOGUE	515
A true classic: unprecedented and unrivaled	515
Rapid dissemination of the Mishneh Torah : critics and commentators	518
Design and reality: the actual impact	526
The Mishneh Torah and subsequent codification	531
Adherence and divergence: the example of talmud Torah	535
An original, dynamic force in Jewish life	536
ABBREVIATIONS	539
General	539
Personal names	539
Tractates of Mishnah, Tosefta, and Talmud	540
Works by Maimonides	540
LIST OF TREATISE TITLES IN MT	542
GLOSSARY	544
BIBLIOGRAPHY	561
GENERAL INDEX	611
INDEX OF MAIMONIDEAN PASSAGES	622