

Contents

|                                                                                              |     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Preface                                                                                      | vii |
| Acknowledgments                                                                              | ix  |
| Part One Introductory Chapters                                                               |     |
| 1 What Is Early Analytic Philosophy, and How to Write Its History?                           | 3   |
| 2 What Is the Logical History of Philosophy?                                                 | 15  |
| Part Two Leibniz and Hegel                                                                   |     |
| 3 Leibniz's Project for Characteristica Universalis and the Early Analytic Philosophy | 31  |
| 4 Making Sense of Hegel with the Help of Early Analytic Philosophy                           | 41  |
| 5 Frege and German Philosophical Idealism                                                    | 53  |
| Part Three Hermann Lotze                                                                     |     |
| 6 Lotze and the Early Cambridge Analytic Philosophy                                          | 67  |
| 7 Russell's Debt to Lotze                                                                    | 81  |
| 8 Lotze's Concept of State of Affairs                                                        | 96  |
| Part Four Edmund Husserl                                                                     |     |
| 9 Edmund Husserl and Bertrand Russell, 1905–1918                                             | 111 |
| 10 Husserl's Theory of Manifolds in Relation to Russell and Wittgenstein                     | 125 |
| 11 Wittgenstein's Indefinables and His Phenomenology                                         | 136 |
| Part Five Two Neglected German Proto-analytic Philosophers                                   |     |
| 12 G. E. Moore and Johannes Rehmke                                                           | 151 |
| 13 Leonard Nelson, Karl Popper, and Early Analytic Philosophy                                | 166 |

Part Six Different Conceptions of Analytic Philosophy

|    |                                                                   |     |
|----|-------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 14 | Wittgenstein and the Vienna Circle versus G. E. Moore and Russell | 181 |
| 15 | Two Concepts of Early Analytic Philosophy                         | 193 |
| 16 | What Is Analytic Philosophy?                                      | 208 |
|    | Notes                                                             | 225 |
|    | References                                                        | 245 |
|    | Index                                                             | 272 |