

Shakespeare and the supernatural

Edited by Victoria Bladen and Yan Brailowsky

Manchester University Press

Contents

List of figures	page ix
Notes on contributors	x
Acknowledgements	xiv
Introduction: Shakespeare and the supernatural – Victoria Bladen and Yan Brailowsky	1
I Embodying the supernatural	29
1 Shakespeare’s political spectres – Victoria Bladen	31
2 ‘Rudely stamped’: supernatural generation and the limits of power in Shakespeare’s Richard III – Chelsea Phillips	50
3 Digital puppetry and the supernatural: double Ariel in the Royal Shakespeare Company’s The Tempest (2017) – Anchuli Felicia King	70
II Haunted spaces	85
4 Demons and puns: revisiting the ‘cellarage scene’ in Hamlet – Pierre Kapitaniak	87
5 Performing the Shakespearean supernatural in Avignon: a challenge to the Festival – Florence March	114

III Supernatural utterance and haunted texts	135
6 Prophecy and the supernatural: Shakespeare's challenges to performativity – Yan Brailowsky	137
7 Puck, Philostrate and the locus of A Midsummer Night's Dream's topical allegory – Laurie Johnson	157
8 'Strange intelligence': transformations of witchcraft in Macbeth discourse – William C. Carroll	173
IV Magic, music and gender	191
9 Music and magic in The Tempest : Ariel's alchemical songs – Natalie Roulon	193
10 From Prospero to Prospera: transforming gender and magic on stage and screen – Katharine Goodland	218
V Contemporary transformations	243
11 'I'll put a girdle round the earth in forty minutes': representing the supernatural in film adaptations of A Midsummer Night's Dream – Gayle Allan	245
12 Ophelia and her magical daughters: the afterlives of Ophelia in Japanese pop culture – Yukari Yoshihara	262
Index	278