

Contents

Acknowledgments	page xi
Note on sources	xiii
Introduction	I
Part I: Kant's early view
1 The problem of objective validity	11
The emergence of a problem	11
The absence of the understanding	15
Ontological realism	20
2 The transcendental theory of experience: 1774–1775	25
Synthetic judgment and the possibility of experience	27
Kant's fundamental ambivalence	39
Titles of the understanding	41
Functions of apperception	47
Restriction or imposition?	53
Analogies of experience	61
Part II: The transcendental deduction from 1781 to 1787
3 The real premises of the deduction	73
A plethora of premises	73
The deduction and time-determination	87
4 The deduction from knowledge of objects	91
IA: A priori knowledge of objects	92
IB: A priori conditions for empirical knowledge	121
5 The deduction and apperception	131
IIA: A priori knowledge of the unity of the self	132
IIB: A priori conditions of empirical self-knowledge	149
Part III: The principles of empirical knowledge
6 The schematism and system of principles	157
What is the schematism?	157
Intuitions, schemata, and concepts	162

CONTENTS

Categories, appearances, and time	166
The transcendental time-determinations	172
The reemergence of Kant's original argument	176
7 Axioms and anticipations	183
Mathematical and dynamical principles	183
The axioms of intuition	190
The anticipations of perception	196
8 The general principle of the analogies	207
9 The first analogy: substance	215
The substratum of time itself	216
The analysis of alteration	221
Empirical knowledge of change	224
The conservation of substance	230
10 The second analogy: causation	237
Causation and objective time-determination	241
Objections to Kant's argument	249
The causal principle and simultaneous causation	259
The second analogy and phenomenalism	262
11 The third analogy: interaction	267
Part IV: The refutation of idealism
12 The problem, project, and premise of the refutation	279
The problem of the refutation	280
The project and the premise of the refutation	289
13 The central arguments of the refutation	297
Displaying time in space	297
External objects and subjective succession	305
14 The metaphysics of the refutation	317
Completing the refutation?	317
Presupposing realism	323
Part V: Transcendental idealism
15 Appearances and things in themselves	333
16 Transcendental idealism and the forms of intuition	345
The indispensability of space and time	345
The metaphysics and theology of space and time	350
Transcendental idealism and necessary truth	354
17 Transcendental idealism and the theory of judgment	371
The act of time-determination	372
The legislation of nature	379
18 Transcendental idealism and the "Antinomy of Pure Reason"	385

CONTENTS

The antinomies in the 1770s	387
The antinomies in the Critique	404
Postscript: Realism and idealism	413
Afterword	417
Notes	429
Index of passages cited	467
General index	473