

Table of contents

Foreword and Acknowledgements	VII
Editors' introduction	1
Part I. Grammaticalization
The role of historical research in building a model of Sign Language typology, variation, and change Ted Supalla	15
On the origin of Niger-Congo nominal classification Roland Kießling	43
A closer look at subjectification in the grammaticalization of English modals: From the main verb mo(o)t to the root modal must Keisuke Sanada	67
Subjectivity encoding in Taiwanese Southern Min I-Hsuan Chen	83
Part II. Problems in historical comparison and reconstruction
Emergence of the tone system in the Sanjiazi dialect of Manchu Haibo Wang	101
Searching for undetected genetic links between the languages of South America Willem F. H. Adelaar	115
Reconstructing the category of “associated motion” in Tacanan languages (Amazonian Bolivia and Peru) Antoine Guillaume	129
The mirage of apparent morphological correspondence: A case from Indo-European Kazuhiko Yoshida	153

Part III. Historical development of morphosyntactic features

Analogy as a source of suppletion Matthew L. Juge	175
The rise and demise of possessive classifiers in Austronesian Frantisek Lichtenberk	199
Immediate-future readings of universal quantifier constructions Jack Hoeksema	227
The historical development and functional characteristics of the go-adjective sequence in English Noriko Matsumoto	243
Recycling “junk”: A case for exaptation as a response to breakdown Bettelou Los	267
Sapirian ‘drift’ towards analyticity and long-term morphosyntactic change in Ancient Egyptian Chris H. Reintges	289
Language index	329
Index of terms	333