

---

Contents

---

Preface	ix
1 The central question	1
2 Sense structure and ontology	14
I The whole/part relation in atomic propositions	19
II The part/part relation in atomic propositions	22
III Atomic propositions and ontology	34
IV Conclusion	38
3 The inconceivability of future individuals	40
I Socrates could not be referred to before existing	43
II Socrates was inconceivable before existing	50
III The challenge of Plantinga's haecceitism	51
IV The challenge of universalism	60
V Conclusion	62
4 Existence is a real property	64
I '— exists' as a first-level predicate	65
II Basic flaw in denial of first-level view	69
III Existence is a real property	75
IV Conclusion	77
5 Why existence? The penultimate answer	79
I The argument	80
II Objections	87
III Further conclusions	91
6 Why existence? The ultimate answer	96
I Conditions for a necessarily terminating causal series	98
II Logical form of a necessarily terminating causal series	103
III Causal series and the contingency argument	109

7	The uncaused cause	114
	I Objections to the notion of an uncaused cause	114
	II Elaborating on the uncaused cause	116
8	Necessary existence	137
	I The notion of necessary existence	137
	II Does the uncaused cause exist necessarily?	146
	III Conclusion	150
9	Objections to the contingency argument	153
	I Comment on particular objections	155
	II Conclusion	167
10	The contingency argument misconceived	169
	I Misconceptions	170
	II The central role of the principle of non-contradiction	172
	III Conclusion	174
	Appendices To chapter 2:
	Objections to predicate instances	175
	To chapter 3:
	Objections to the impossibility of referring to future individuals	179
	To chapter 4:
	I Flaws in the Russellian and Quinean-type views	189
	II Existence is irreducible to other properties	195
	Index	200