

Contents

Preface	ix
List of Abbreviations	x
Introduction: The Enemy Within	1
Taking enemies in	1
This multivariant plot	5
The vitality of difference	7
A lineage of wariness and influence	9
The terrible postmodern party	14
Part 1 Features of Redemptive Hybridism
1 The Redemptive Textual Body	23
Etymologically speaking	23
Umbilical connection, author to text	29
The Word made flesh	37
2 The Hybrid Middle	45
Pushing out towards ends	45
Sarraute as middle	47
Parataxis and the middle	54
Time and unfinishedness	58
3 Family Traits of Fragmentation	65
The fragmented mind	67
Constraint, minimalism, and the caveat	70
Vestibule and fringe	73
Ethics, alterity, and the reader	76
The ethical, the moral, and the difference	78
High, low, high, low, it's off to blend we go . . .	82
Part 2 Figures of Redemptive Hybridism
4 Woolf's Atom; the Image of Hybridity	91
Begin with the atom, Virginia Woolf	91

Saturation in Woolf and Wallace	94
Mrs Dalloway as fertile ground	96
Inter-genre Woolf	101
It ends where it begins, with the atom	105
5 Finding a Name for Possibility	109
Postmodernism, feminism, and agency	109
Finding names and building frames	112
Call me[a]taxy: some recent pre-fixes	119
6 The Pale King's Constellation; Factoids, Ghosts, and Boredom	123
Tell the truth, David Foster Wallace	123
Everyday ghosts, souls, and phantoms	132
Ambiguity and contradiction in The Pale King	137
Boredom: between crisis and epiphany	140
A Conclusion, of Sorts: This Is Not the End	147
References	155
Index	162