

Contents

Series editors' preface	ix
Preface	xi
Acknowledgements	xiii
Introduction	1
The argument of this book	4
From Jewish women's history to Jewish feminist theology	13
1 Reading post-Holocaust theology from a feminist perspective	19
Writing women out of (and into) post-Holocaust theology	21
The patriarchal characteristics of post-Holocaust theology	27
Post-Holocaust affirmations of the sovereignty of God	29
God's failure to be patriarchal enough	35
Re-figuring divine power	37
2 The hiding of God's face in Auschwitz	43
The holocaustal dis-appearance of God	44
A God who looks away	47
Presence, absence and gender	50
Israel, present to God	54
3 Feminist intimations of the holy in Auschwitz	59
The covenantal sanctification of Auschwitz	59
The profanization of women in Auschwitz	63
Washing Auschwitz	67
Women's sanctification of Auschwitz	70
The (de)portation of the holy into Auschwitz	81
4 Face to face (with God) in Auschwitz	86
The degradation of relation	89
The persistence of relation	94
Facing God in Auschwitz	100

5	A mother/God in Auschwitz	107
	Maternalist perspectives on post-Holocaust theology	107
	(Divine) motherhood and providence	110
	The maternal face of God in Auschwitz	118
	A dying and deathless God	124
6	The redemption of God in Auschwitz	128
	PART I
	Jewry's eternal presence (or the stopping train)	128
	Envisioning tikkun	134
	Signals of redemption	139
	PART II
	Jewish mysticism and the narration of redemption	145
	Jewish feminism and the redemptive process	149
	Shekhinah: God going with us	152
	The vision of God in Auschwitz	157
	The princess and the city of death: a feminist maaseh, after Rabbi Nachman of Bratslav	161
	Notes	166
	Select glossary of Hebrew and Yiddish terms	205
	Bibliography	207
	Index	221