

Contents

Preface to the Political Works 1

THE SUMMARY CAUSE FOR THE STABILITY OR DOWNFALL OF HUMAN SOCIETIES

Chapter

1. The first political criterion	18
2. The universality and logical necessity of the first criterion . . .	21
3. The first political criterion is confirmed by history — The period of the founders of societies — The period of the legislators	26
4. Continuation: the first political criterion applied to the two fundamental laws governing civil society: the law governing ownership and the law governing marriage . . .	29
5. How respect for antiquity and love of useful innovations must be regulated	41
6. The meaning of the rule: ‘a society must often return to its beginning’ if it is to survive	43
7. Our criterion applied to the four stages	45
8. Societies are judged according to practical and speculative reason. — Application of the political criterion to the practical reason of the masses	50
9. Continuation: an explanation of conquests	54
10. The application of the political criterion to the speculative reason of influential individuals	57
11. Relationships in public affairs between the action of speculative reason in individuals, and the contemporaneous action of practical reason in the masses	61

Chapter

12. Substance and accident in social life: the struggle between two summary forces: the single aim of politics	65
13. Elements of the two summary forces which move society: the practical problems of political science	67
14. Three exclusive and therefore defective political systems: true political theory takes account of all elements	72
15. The one formula to which every political problem is reduced: the necessity of statistics, and the ruling principle for their compilation	77
16. The substantial form of society changes position; the law governing this change	79
17. Conclusion	87
Appendix	89
Index of Persons	92
General Index	93