Preface	page 7
1. A Reader's Introduction	13
A contemporary reading of the Qur'ān and the issues it poses: the bond between the book and its own 'people': the task of the external reader and the urge to take it up: Arabic and chronology: content and context in their relationship: courtesy and realism in relation to traditional commentary: Quranic theism and the secular age: the familiar mind, and the open mind, of the Qur'ān.
2. Having the Text by Heart	26
Hifẓ of the Qur'ān, its meaning and significance: the art of tajwīd : dhikr or remembering: the book in the currency of memory: Ibn Khaldūn as an example of the quoting instinct.
3. The Explicit and the Implicit	38
Responsible attitudes to the text: the Qur'ān's own basic principle as to what is definitive and what is figurative: the nature of muhkamāt and mutashābihāt in Surah 3: 7: 'the mother of the book': recurrent themes and the duty of discernment: attitudes of intellectualist or mystical perception: the Scripture in its time and with its audience: the capacity for understanding.
4. The Exegetical Tradition	54
Three classical commentators: Fakhr al-Dīn al-Rāzī on Surah 97: Al-Baiḍāwī on Surah 112: Al-Zamakhsharī on Surah 90: the pre-occupations of traditional exegesis and a present reckoning with their concerns: Bint al-Shāṭī in recent commentary on Surah 93: the modern reader's duty with, and beyond, the old exegetes.
5. 'Perhaps . . .'	75
A different justice to the great original: la'alla , the great 'perhaps' of the Qur'ān about its own hearers and readers: the tests of right reading: pseudo-scientific claims and their rejection: the religious awareness of man in the natural order: the 'oaths' of the Qur'ān: praise and the due sense of God: the significance of the Fātiḥah , or opening Surah: in the context of sujūd or worship: 'the Lord of all being': 'the straight path': the ultimate issue of the role of prophet-hood in the rule of God: the crisis in Muḥammad's experience of human rejection: Islam institutionalized in state-power: this vital clue as the central religious theme.

6. The Trouble of Man 93

Birth and sexuality in the Qur'ān: the mystery of man: the dark shadows in the ruin of cities and the unheeded prophets in their sequence: human obduracy: 'the earth and her burdens': man 'prone to evil': ẓulm as a pivotal term and its deep implications in the Qur'ān: nifāq or hypocrisy: the marad or sickness of man: the personal continuum after death: Quranic eschatology and the questions relating to it: 'a vale of soul-making'.
7. The Seeking of Forgiveness 110

Istaghfir Allāh and its implications as a reiterated Quranic command: self-accusation and the sense of the need for pardon: God as its direction: seeking forgiveness and seeking 'protection': pardon and pilgrimage: the will to extrication from the evils of life: being forgiving: divine Raḥmah or mercy: its Quranic quality: its meaning as evoking the mercy of man: contemporary issues, Marxist and secular, that belong with evil and its retrieval: forgiveness as the largest test of man.
8. 'No God but Thou . . .' 129

God and man: the divine recognition—the human choice: the atheist interpretation of the human and Quranic theism: the phrase min dūni-llāhi and the human non-acknowledgement of God: Tauḥīd and shirk in their Quranic antithesis: pagan pluralism: different gods and indifferent humans: man's recent idolatries: 'being absolute for God alone' in Islam: ikhhlās and istighnā: secularity and 'the right of the rightful God': the liberty to be idolatrous and the true submission: the dominion of man and the poetry of experience.
9. The Sacramental Earth 146

The Quranic āyāt: man arrested by phenomena: perceptiveness, religious and scientific: 'the ground is holy': the central concept of kufr: man in ingratitude: unity in plurality: a monotheism of the imagination: shukr and the role of symbol: 'friend of God in the universe'.
10. Desiring the Face of God 163

The Ṣūfī mind and the Qur'ān: the tension between an authoritative Scripture and a mystical liberty: the book as the guardian of orthodoxy and the fount of Ṣūfī vitality: passages most notably possessed by Islamic mysticism: 'the face of God': the Surah of Light: the divine Names: Tauḥīd and Fanā: the soul's allegiance: the paradox of the self.

11. Directive and Direction	182
Review: the authoritative Scripture and the communal mind: direction of development in the sense of Quranic directives: being Muslim with the Qur'ān today: the question of textual 'criticism': the form of authority to faith: examples of flexibility in interpretation: pragmatic change: surviving supposed indispensables: being Islamic in the world: the issue of secularization: Dār al-Islām and its feasible modern meaning: the concept of repugnancy to the Qur'ān: being religious with Islam: the ecumenical questions: the Qur'ān in universal religious dialogue.
