INTRODUCTION: George Molnar and Powers Stephen Mumford	1
POWERS George Molnar	19
1. The Elements (I): Properties	21
1.1 Foundations	21
1.2 Properties Are Tropes	22
1.3 Selective Realism about Properties	25
1.3.1 Predicates and properties are not isomorphic	25
1.3.2 Dispositional predicates and power properties are not isomorphic	27
1.4 Distinctions	28
1.4.1 Derivative–basic	28
1.4.2 First order–higher order	30
1.4.3 Simple–complex	33
1.4.4 Essential–necessary–accidental	37
1.4.5 Extrinsic–intrinsic	39
1.4.6 Transferable–non-transferable	43
2. The Elements (II): On What There Is	47
2.1 Objects as Bundles of Properties	47
2.2 Foundationism about Relations	51
2.3 The Status of States of Affairs	54
2.4 Introduction to the Theory of Powers	57
3. Directedness	60
3.1 Directedness	60
3.2 The Brentano Thesis	61
3.3 What Is Intentionality?	62
3.4 Parallels between Psychological Intentionality and Physical Intentionality	63

3.5	Objections to Physical Intentionality	66
3.5.1	Impossible intentional objects	66
3.5.2	Unique intentional objects	68
3.5.3	The threat of panpsychism	70
3.5.4	A deluge of necessities	71
3.5.5	Intentionality and meaning	71
3.5.6	Summary: The intentionality of powers	81
4.	Independence	82
4.1	Is there a Problem about Unmanifesting Powers?	82
4.2	Independence and the Conditional Analysis of Powers	83
4.2.1	Naive conditional analysis	84
4.2.2	Causal conditional analysis	89
4.2.3	A reformed conditional analysis	92
4.3	Anti-realism about Unmanifesting Powers	94
4.3.1	What is Megaric Actualism?	94
4.3.2	The case against Megaric Actualism	95
5.	Actuality	99
6.	Intrinsicality	102
6.1	Boyle on the Relational Nature of Capacities	102
6.2	Popperian Propensities	105
6.3	Are there Any Extrinsic Powers?	108
7.	Objectivity	111
7.1	What Is Objectivity?	111
7.2	Anthropocentrism in the Analysis of Powers	113
7.2.1	Hume's anti-objectivism	113
7.2.2	Hume's argument against strong connections: Exposition	116
7.2.3	Hume's argument against strong connections: Evaluation	121
8.	Do Powers Need Grounds?	125
8.1	The Thesis that Powers Need Grounds	125
8.2	Motivations for the Thesis	125
8.2.1	Weak motives	125
8.2.2	Strong motives	126
8.3	Prior, Pargetter, and Jackson's Argument for a Causal Base	127

8.4	The Missing Base	131
8.4.1	The problem of the missing base	131
8.4.2	Responses to the problem	132
8.4.3	Evaluating the responses	133
8.5	What if There Are Ungrounded Powers?	137
8.5.1	The double standard	137
8.5.2	Truncating functionalism?	140
8.5.3	Acceptance	141
9.	The Ontology of Powers	143
9.1	Derivative Powers and Basic Powers	143
9.1.1	What is derivation?	143
9.1.2	Consequences of derivation	146
9.2	Theories of the Ontology of Powers—a Taxonomy and an Interim Evaluation	148
9.2.1	Dualism of pure types	149
9.2.2	Dual-sided theory	149
9.2.3	Pan-dispositionalism	153
9.2.4	Categoricalism	154
9.2.5	Neutral monism	154
10.	Non-Powers	158
10.1	Two Questions	158
10.2	Properties that Are not Powers	158
10.3	The Causal Relevance of Non-Powers	162
10.4	How Can Properties that Are not Powers be Causally Relevant?	164
10.5	Alternative Theories of Non-Powers	166
10.5.1	Occurrent properties	166
10.5.2	Manifest properties	167
10.5.3	Actual properties	168
10.5.4	Scientific properties	168
10.5.5	Properties that do not entail conditionals	169
10.5.6	Spatio-temporal properties	169
11.	Objections Considered	173
11.1	Two Major Objections	173
11.2	'Always packing, never travelling'	173
11.2.1	What makes the regress vicious: Space occupancy?	174
11.2.2	What makes the regress vicious: Conditionals?	176
11.2.3	What makes the regress vicious: Lack of qualities?	177

11.2.4	Moderate dispositionalism	179
11.2.5	Dispositionalism reassessed	180
11.3	Humean Distinctness	181
12.	Powers at Work	186
12.1	Towards a Dispositional Theory of Causation	187
12.1.1	On defining 'cause'	188
12.1.2	The contested characteristics of causation	190
12.1.3	Effects are polygenic; manifestations are not	194
12.1.4	Single-track versus multi-track powers?	198
12.1.5	Laws of nature	199
12.1.6	Summary	199
12.2	Modality	200
12.2.1	The options: Reductionism versus eliminativism versus primitivism	200
12.2.2	Reductionism (1): Combinatorial theories	202
12.2.3	Reductionism (2): Stark realism about worlds (Lewis)	215
12.2.4	Eliminativism: The regularity theory of logical truths	219
12.2.5	Conclusion	223
