

Contents

Notes on Contributors xii

Introduction xiv

PART ONE: METHODS AND EVALUATION OF PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTING

1 Nature, advantages and limitations of psychological tests	3
Kenneth M. Miller
Tests of general ability or intelligence	4
Tests of special abilities	5
Tests of interests and motivation	5
Assessment of personality	6
Distortion	7
Characteristics of a good test	8
Using test results	9
Making decisions	10
How to introduce tests	11
Professional and ethical considerations	12
References	15

PART TWO: CASE STUDIES IN THE USE OF PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTS

2 Introducing and validating tests: one company's experience	19
--	----

	T.M. Higham
	Overcoming initial opposition	20
	Acceptability	22
	Technical soundness	22
	Validation must be repeated	24
	Establishing a criterion	25
	The classic approach	27
	Hints on using tests	27
3	Use of tests in the Post Office Corporation	29
	W.A. Furness
	Psychological tests for postmen?	29
	Reasons for using tests	30
	Tests for selection at below-management levels	31
	Tests for selection at managerial levels	32
	Tests for promotion	34
	Concept of the assessment centre	34
	Case for including tests and other exercises in promotion procedures	35
	Some current uses of tests in promotion procedures	35
	Validation	36
	Tests in use — some practical considerations	41
4	Use of tests at United Biscuits	45
	D. Wilson
	Procedure for testing during selection	45
	General approach of the company to testing	46
	Company policy	47
	Graduate recruitment	48
	Management development	49
	Supervisory selection and development from within the company	52
	Other uses of tests	56
	Additional benefits from the use of tests	56
	Introduction of tests	57
	Conclusions	59
5	Graduate selection	61
	C.C.P. Ingleton
	Selection procedure	61
	Current testing procedure	63
	Problems encountered	64
	Reaction of line managers to tests	66
	Reaction of graduates to tests	66
	Motivational distortion	69
	Evaluation of tests	70
	Summary	75
	References	75

6	The use of tests and scored questionnaires in salesmen selection	77
	G.A. Randell
	Collecting the data	78
	Tests and questionnaires used	79
	Analysing the data	80
	Findings and outcomes	80
	General conclusions	88
	References	90
7	Selecting engineers in an electronics firm	91
	J. Copeland
	The Morrisby Differential Test Battery	93
	Other tests	99
	Using the tests	100
	Contribution from the DTB	103
	Future plans	106
	Conclusion	106
	References	107
8	Choosing tests for clerical selection	109
	Kenneth M. Miller
	Purposes of the study	109
	Samples	110
	Criterion measures	112
	Contribution of each individual test	112
	Best combination of tests	116
	Effectiveness	119
	Conclusion	121
9	Use of tests for local authority staff	122
	J. Gibson
	Difficulties in selection peculiar to local authorities	122
	Decision to use tests	124
	Purposes for which tests are used	125
	Staff assessed by tests	125
	The tests and their contribution	127
	Future developments	133
	References	135
10	Use of tests in a national retail company	137
	R. Beaton
	Factors influencing the introduction of tests	137
	Objectives	138
	Situations in which one type of criterion only

was suitable	139
Situations in which the one criterion was not categorical but continuous	142
Situations in which more than one type of criterion is applied	145
Situations in which personality is 'suited' to a job	147
Contribution of tests to Telefusion's selection procedure	148
 PART THREE: SURVEY OF THE USE OF PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTS
11 The use of tests in British industry and commerce	151
 Kenneth M. Miller
Description of the sample	152
Use of tests	154
Information about individual members of the IPM	162
Summary and implications	163
Postscript	164
Reference	165
 PART FOUR: APPENDICES
Appendix 1 British Psychological Society criteria for evaluating short training courses on psychological tests	169
Appendix 2 Tests referred to in Part Two J. Gibson	171
Index	177