

Table of contents

Introduction	1
Kurt Braunmüller
Part I. Theoretical aspects
Linguistic stability and divergence: An extended perspective on language contact	13
Karoline Kühn and Kurt Braunmüller
Convergence vs. divergence from a diasystematic perspective	39
Steffen Höder
Part II. Empirical studies
Stability and convergence in case marking: Low and High German	63
Kristian Berg
Towards a typological classification of Judeo-Spanish: Analyzing syntax and prosody of Bulgarian judezmo	77
Susann Fischer, Christoph Gabriel and Elena Kireva
Despite or because of intensive contact? Internal, external and extralinguistic aspects of divergence in modern dialects and ethnolects of Dutch	109
Frans Hinskens
Stability in Chinese and Malay heritage languages as a source of divergence	141
Suzanne Aalberse and Francesca Moro
Does convergence generate stability? The case of the Cypriot Greek koiné	163
Stavroula Tsiplakou
Gender and noun inflection: The fate of ‘vulnerable’ categories in Northern Norwegian	179
Hilde Sollid, Philipp Konzett and Åse Mette Johansen

Dialect stability and divergence in southern Spain: Social and personal motivations	207
Juan A. Villena-Ponsoda and Antonio M. Ávila-Muñoz
The Bergen dialect splits in two	239
Helge Sandøy, Ragnhild Lie Anderson and Maria-Rosa Doublet
Diachronic convergence and divergence in differential object marking between Spanish and Portuguese	265
Hans-Jörg Döhla
Person index	291
Subject index	295