

CONTENTS

1	INTRODUCTION	11
1.1	Syntactic variation	11
1.2	The genitive and the of -construction	12
1.3	Aim and scope	15
1.4	Previous work	16
1.5	The 17th century	20
1.6	Delimitation of the data	21
1.6.1	Structurally deviant constructions	22
1.6.2	Compounds and idiomatic expressions	23
1.6.3	Obligatory of -constructions	27
1.6.4	Other principles	31
1.7	Method	32
1.8	Corpus	33
	Notes	39
2	THE FORM OF THE GENITIVE	42
2.1	Formal distinctions	42
2.2	The regular form	42
2.3	The his -genitive	43
2.4	The zero genitive	45
2.5	The influence of a final sibilant	51
2.6	The apostrophe	53
2.7	The ambiguity of the genitive plural	58
2.8	The group genitive	59
2.8.1	The coordinated group	59
2.8.2	The postmodified group	61
2.8.3	The appositive group	62
2.9	The independent genitive	63
2.9.1	The elliptic genitive	64
2.9.2	The local genitive	65
2.9.3	The absolute genitive	68
2.10	The double genitive	70
	Notes	72

3	SYNTACTIC FACTORS	76
3.1	Weight and syntactic complexity	76
3.2	Left-branching expansion	79
3.3	Right-branching expansion	84
3.3.1	Postmodification	87
3.3.2	Finite clauses	87
3.3.3	Non-finite clauses	90
3.3.4	Prepositional phrases	91
3.3.5	Other postmodification	94
3.3.6	Apposition	96
3.3.7	Coordination	99
3.3.8	Combined expansion	103
3.3.9	Summary	107
3.4	Recursive NP expansion	111
	Notes	115
4	LEXICAL FACTORS	117
4.1	Introduction	117
4.2	Semantic classification	120
4.3	Influence of the modifying noun	123
4.4	Human individual nouns	124
4.4.1	Proper nouns	125
4.4.2	Common nouns	127
4.5	Collective nouns	130
4.6	Animal nouns	132
4.7	Abstract nouns	132
4.8	Concrete nouns	135
4.9	Genitive outside Corpus 4	138
4.10	Influence of the head noun	140
4.11	Summary	146
	Notes	149
5	THE MODIFIER-HEAD RELATION	151
5.1	Introduction	151
5.1.1	The traditional approach	152
5.1.2	The generative-transformational approach ...	154
5.1.3	Case grammar	156
5.1.4	Some problems in case grammar	160
5.1.5	A modified version of case grammar	161
5.1.6	Case relations in binominal phrases	170
5.1.7	Possible case configurations	173
5.1.8	Corpus	175

5.2	The Subjective type	175
5.2.1	Some derivational distinctions	175
5.2.2	Verb-related heads	177
5.2.3	Adjective-related heads	180
5.2.4	Subjective case structures	184
5.2.5	Choice of construction	186
5.3	The Performative type	188
5.3.1	General characteristics	188
5.3.2	Performative case structures	189
5.3.3	Choice of construction	191
5.4	The Orientative type	191
5.4.1	General characteristics	191
5.4.2	The Experiencer subtype	192
5.4.3	The Recipient subtype	194
5.4.4	The Locative subtype	196
5.4.5	Choice of construction	199
5.5	The Existential type	203
5.5.1	General characteristics	203
5.5.2	Choice of construction	204
5.6	The Objective type	205
5.6.1	General characteristics	205
5.6.2	Choice of construction	209
5.7	The Thematic type	215
5.7.1	General characteristics	215
5.7.2	Choice of construction	216
5.8	The Appositive type	217
5.8.1	General characteristics	217
5.8.2	Choice of construction	220
5.9	The Quantifying type	222
5.9.1	General characteristics	222
5.9.2	Duration	222
5.9.3	Distance	223
5.9.4	Value	223
5.9.5	Choice of construction	224

5.10	Residual types	226
5.10.1	Some deviant case structures	226
5.10.2	Mixed case structures	227
5.10.3	Symmetric relations	229
5.10.4	Company, society	230
5.10.5	Likeness, resemblance	234
5.10.6	Choice of construction	235
5.11	Conclusion	236
5.11.1	The case type as conditioning factor	236
5.11.2	The case structure as conditioning factor	239
5.11.3	The modifying case role as conditioning factor	240
5.11.4	Stylistic influence	242
	Notes	244
6	COMMUNICATIVE ASPECTS: STYLISTIC AND THEMATIC INFLUENCE	249
6.1	Introduction	249
6.2	Stylistic variation	250
6.3	Textual variation	251
6.4	Genre variation	251
6.4.1	Religious prose	255
6.4.2	Essays	266
6.4.3	Comedies	268
6.4.4	Diaries and correspondence	271
6.4.5	Travels	273
6.4.6	Poetry and tragedy	273
6.5	Diachronic change and the influence of period	278
6.6	Stylistic influence: summary	281
6.7	Thematic influence	284
6.8	Parallelism	288
	Notes	291
7	CONCLUSION	294
	REFERENCES	304