

Contents

Preface

List of abbreviations

Chapter One: Introduction	1
1. Theoretical motivation	1
2. Why re-study the development of do ?	5
3. Theories and data	6
4. Heterogeneity of explanatory dimensions	8
5. Structure of presentation	9
Chapter Two: Do up to the fifteenth century	11
1. Phases of do development	11
2. The origin of “meaningless periphrastic do ”	16
3. Do in the Paston letters (1422-1509)	21
4. The democratization of do : a speculation	23
Chapter Three: Do and discourse structure	31
1. Do as a marker of discourse-semantic prominence	31
2. Saliency and foregrounding	35
3. Foreground and contrastiveness	37
4. Local foreground structure markers	38
Chapter Four: Syntax and style in the sixteenth century	43
1. Do in the sixteenth century: the quantitative problem	43
2. Standard and prose style	44
3. Main stylistic currents	46
4. Relevant stylistic structures	50
5. Imitating Latin syntax	56
6. Antithesis	59

Chapter Five: The semantics of do in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries	63
1. Analysis of a pamphlet by John Fisher (1521)	63
2. Authority	64
3. Rhetoric and foreground	67
4. Rhetorical questions	82
5. Negation	85
6. Intensity	87
7. Performatives, speech act verbs, and verbs of perception	93
8. Logical relationships	99
9. Standardization and synonyms	101
Chapter Six: Unity and diversity: style, dialect and the semantics of do before 1600	103
1. Use and semantics	103
2. Syntactic versus semantic explanation	106
3. Do as a marker of courtly speech	108
4. Do in low texts	121
5. The demise of courtly do	126
6. A case study: Early American letters	131
7. Semantic, stylistic and dialectal diversity, and German tun	136
8. Methodological considerations	141
Chapter Seven: Do in the Shakespeare corpus	143
1. An initial hypothesis	143
1.1. The problem	143
1.2. The phonotactics and frequency of thou + st	144
1.3. Methodological advantages of the Shakespeare corpus	146
2. Subcategorizations and terminological conventions	148
3. Phonotactics and periphrasis frequency	150
3.1. Differences between person and tense categories	150
3.2. Differences between phonetically defined types of verb stems in the present	151
3.3. Differences between syntactic contexts in the present	154
3.4. Generalization in the present from thou + you	162

4. Diachronic interpretation of the synchronic pattern	168
4.1. Analysis of the preterite and diachronic interpretation of the subcategorical pattern	168
4.2. Stability of the variational pattern	172
5. Further strategies of avoiding (d) st	175
6. Negatives	178
 Chapter Eight: Do in questions in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries: the statistical evidence	 179
1. Methodological considerations	179
2. Corpora analyzed	180
3. From raw data to indices: an example	182
4. Periphrasis frequency in questions in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries: the evidence	183
 Chapter Nine: The mechanics of generalization	 195
1. Individual utterance versus system	195
2. Naturalness and isolect	198
3. Micro-structure of generalization I	203
4. Rhetorical and other questions	208
5. Micro-structure of generalization II	210
6. Frequency and residuals	213
7. Poetic uses	220
 Chapter Ten: Third singular morphology and syntax	 223
1. Inflectional ending and verbal syntax	223
2. The transition from th to s	226
3. The phonotactic factor	229
4. Parallels between third singular and do development	230
 Chapter Eleven: Subjunctive	 233
1. Overview and purpose	233
2. Historical development of subjunctive marking	234
3. The structure of subjunctive marking in Early Modern English	238
4. The inflectional motivation of subjunctive marking	247
5. Do in subjunctives	250

Chapter Twelve: Wh -questions	255
1. Motivations for analyzing wh -questions	255
2. Empirical data	256
3. Results	258
4. Interpretation	259
5. Dimensions of directionality	262
Chapter Thirteen: Natural and social aspects	267
1. The semantic unity of do uses	267
1.1. The rise of epistemic do	267
1.2. Do in negation	269
1.3. Exclamatives	271
1.4. Emphatic do	272
1.5. Typology and grammaticalization	275
1.6. Semantics of do and inversion	278
1.7. Further word-order factors	280
2. Natural tendencies	282
2.1. Motivations for naturalness	282
2.1.1. Individual and group	282
2.1.2. Natural tendencies and prediction	284
2.1.3. Conflict between internal and external factors	287
2.1.4. Types of natural tendencies	289
2.1.5. Theoretical orientation of naturalism	292
2.2. Natural tendencies in the development of do	296
2.2.1. Similarity	296
2.2.2. Economy and simplification	300
2.2.3. Long-term and short-term goals	306
2.2.4. Syntactic environing of phonological processes	311
3. Semantic directionality: subjectivization	313
4. Social and varietal aspects	317
4.1. Do and written standard	317
4.2. The diversity of do meanings	318
4.3. Order and grammar	322
4.4. Medium and meanings of do	325
4.5. The unfashionableness of thou	328
Conclusion	333

Appendices	335
Bibliography	415
Index	443