

Contents

1. Intuitions in Philosophy: Overview and Taxonomy	1
Part I. The Argument from ‘Intuition’-Talk
Introduction to Part I	25
2. ‘Intuitive’, ‘Intuitively’, ‘Intuition’, and ‘Seem’ in English	29
3. Philosophers’ Use of ‘Intuitive’ (I): A Defective Practice and the Verbal Virus Theory	49
4. Philosophers’ Use of ‘Intuitive’ (II): Some Strategies for Charitable Reinterpretation	61
Appendix to Chapter 4: Williamson on Intuition as Belief or Inclination to Believe	83
5. Philosophers’ Use of ‘Intuitive’ (III): Against the Explaining Away of Intuitions	88
Part II. The Argument from Philosophical Practice
Introduction to Part II	95
6. Centrality and Philosophical Practice	98
7. Diagnostics for Intuitiveness	111
8. Case Studies	130
9. Lessons Learned, Replies to Objections, and Comparison to Williamson	188
10. Conceptual Analysis and Intuitions	205
11. A Big Mistake: Experimental Philosophy	219
Concluding Remarks	229
Bibliography	231
Index	239

Detailed Contents

1. Intuitions in Philosophy: Overview and Taxonomy	1
1.1 The role of intuitions in the self-conception of contemporary analytic philosophers: Centrality	2
1.2 Two arguments for Centrality: the Argument from 'Intuition'-Talk and the Argument from Philosophical Practice	4
1.3 'Intuition' in Centrality	7
1.4 More on how to interpret Centrality	12
1.5 Burning questions for proponents of Centrality: the pessimists, the enthusiasts, and the concerned	17
1.6 Rejection of Centrality: Philosophy without intuitions	18
Part I. The Argument from 'Intuition'-Talk
Introduction to Part I	25
2. 'Intuitive', 'Intuitively', 'Intuition', and 'Seem' in English	29
2.1 The adjective 'intuitive' and the adverb 'intuitively'	30
2.2 'Intuitive' as a hedge	36
2.3 The noun phrase 'intuition'	39
2.4 'Seem' and 'intuitive'	42
2.5 Taking stock	47
3. Philosophers' Use of 'Intuitive' (I): A Defective Practice and the Verbal Virus Theory	49
3.1 Constructive vs. defective theoretical terms	50
3.2 Problems for 'intuition' in philosophy	52
3.3 Disagreement over the theoretical role of intuitions	55
3.4 Are unreflective uses of 'intuitive' meaningless?	57
4. Philosophers' Use of 'Intuitive' (II): Some Strategies for Charitable Reinterpretation	61
4.1 First strategy: Simple Removal	63

4.2	Second and third strategies: Snap and Pre-Theoretic	65
4.3	The three strategies at work: Some complicated mixed cases	71
4.4	Taking stock	77
4.5	No appeal to special feelings, conceptual competence, or default justificatory status	77
4.6	Back to Centrality and AIT: None of these interpretative strategies are Centrality-supporting	81
	Appendix to Chapter 4: Williamson on Intuition as Belief or Inclination to Believe	83
5.	Philosophers' Use of 'Intuitive' (III): Against the Explaining Away of Intuitions	88
5.1	The argument against Explain	89
5.2	Is there some intellectually useful activity that's mistakenly classified as 'explaining away intuitions'?	92
 Part II. The Argument from Philosophical Practice
	Introduction to Part II	95
6.	Centrality and Philosophical Practice	98
6.1	Methodological rationalism	99
6.2	The influence of methodological rationalism	105
7.	Diagnostics for Intuitiveness	111
7.1	Features of the intuitive	111
7.2	Some initial qualifications	114
7.3	More on the features of the intuitive	117
7.4	Summary and additional reflections on how to operationalize appeals to intuitions	128
8.	Case Studies	130
8.1	Perry on the problem of the essential indexical	132
8.2	Burge on individualism and the mental	139
8.3	Thomson's violinist in "A Defense of Abortion"	148
8.4	Thomson and Foot on trolley cases	158
8.5	Three epistemology cases: Lotteries, Truetemp, and fake barns	163
8.6	Cappelen and Hawthorne on disagreement, predicates of personal taste, and relativism about truth	175

8.7 Bernard Williams on personal identity and the fear of the prospect of torture	179
8.8 Chalmers on zombies	182
8.9 Conclusion	187
9. Lessons Learned, Replies to Objections, and Comparison to Williamson	188
9.1 What cases are: some generalizations	188
9.2 Objections and replies	193
9.3 Williamson on Evidence Neutrality, psychologizing the evidence, and analyticity	200
10. Conceptual Analysis and Intuitions	205
10.1 Hyperbole about intuitions leads to hyperbole about conceptual analysis	205
10.2 Are there any conceptual truths, and, if so, are they philosophically significant?	210
10.3 Conclusion: Centrality as a sectarian thesis	217
11. A Big Mistake: Experimental Philosophy	219
11.1 Experimental philosophy: Positive and negative	219
11.2 The Big Objection to experimental philosophy: It attacks a practice that doesn't exist	221
11.3 Experimental philosophy without intuitions?	224
11.4 Experimental philosophy and the expertise defense of traditional philosophy	227
Concluding Remarks	229
Bibliography	231
Index	239