

Contents

|                                                                                               |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Acknowledgments                                                                               | ix  |
| Note on Editions and Translations                                                             | xi  |
| INTRODUCTION The Arts Are Produced byOvercrowding                                         | I   |
| ONE Out of One City—Two                                                                       | 9   |
| TWO Writers in the Ancient City: Horace, Juvenal, andPlautus                              | 33  |
| THREE To Starve with Feeding: Shakespeare's Idea ofRome                                   | 58  |
| FOUR "Some High-Vic'd City": Timon of Athens , Sejanus ,and Catiline | 91  |
| FIVE The Commonwealth Fained: Jonson's Masques andMiddleton's Civic Pageants              | 124 |
| SIX Parasites and Sub-parasites: The City as Predator inJonson and Middleton              | 150 |
| SEVEN The Nature of Our People: Shakespeare's CityComedies                                | 178 |

Contents

|            |                            |     |
|------------|----------------------------|-----|
| CONCLUSION | A Bounty of Contradictions | 220 |
| Notes      |                            | 225 |
| Index      |                            | 245 |