

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction: Victorians and Mystery	1
PART ONE
Mystery and the Unconscious: Can Free Will Exist?	21
1 Can We Be Conscious of Meanings That Lie outside Consciousness?	28
2 We Know More Than We Know We Know: Repetition in Dickens and Hardy	34
3 "It Is Unutterable": The Burden of Signs in Wuthering Heights and Villette	53
4 "The Signless Inane": Mystery and the Unconscious in Carlyle	72
5 Incomprehensible Certainties and Interesting Uncertainties: Hopkins and Tennyson	88
PART TWO
Mystery and Identity: Is Self-Creation Possible?	107
6 Making up People: Are Moral Values Invented or Described?	115
7 Estranging the Familiar: Veils of Reserve in Trollope and James	122
8 The Dark Principle: Erosions of Identity in Vanity Fair	141
9 The Burden of Role-Playing: Self-Creation in Borrow and Clough	157

10	We Make Our Truths but Cannot Speak Them: George Eliot and the Uses of Silence	176
11	Browning's Unheard Words: The Poetry of Silence	196
PART THREE
	Mystery and Method: Is a Centerless View a True One?	221
12	Must We Explain What We Believe and Prove What We Explain?	228
13	Newman on Faith: A Heroic Theory of Knowledge	234
14	Meaning More Than Is Said: Sources of Mystery in Christina Rossetti and Arnold	251
15	The Bewitchment of Words: J. S. Mill on Saying More Than Is Meant	276
16	The Critic as Detective: Mystery and Method in The Moonstone	288
17	Browning and Mystery: The Ring and the Book and Modern Theory	300
	Conclusion: Crises in Representation	322
	Bibliography	349
	Index	361