

Contents

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction 1

1 The Prejudices against Voice-Over
Narration 8

Images versus Words 8
“Showing” versus “Telling” 12
“A Literary Device” 17
“Redundancy” 19
“The Last Resort of the Incompetent” 21

2 Ancestors, Influences, and Development 23

Lecturers and Intertitles in the Silent Era 23
Radio 26
Newsreels, Short Subjects, and
Documentaries 28
Fiction Films, 1930–1950 31
Television and Postwar Documentaries 35
Fiction Films, 1950 to the Present 37

3 First-Person Narrators 41

Genette’s Taxonomy of Narrators 42
Who Really Narrates? 43

The Circumstances of Narration	49
Story and Discourse and How Green Was My Valley	53
Foregrounding the Act of Storytelling and All About Eve	62
4 Third-Person Narrators	72
Who Really Narrates?	74
The Circumstances of Narration	76
Omniscience	79
Humanizing the “Voice of God” and The Naked City	82
Gender	99
5 Irony in Voice-Over Films	102
The Interplay between Narration and Scenic Presentation	102
Voice-Over’s Contribution to Cinematic Irony	109
Ironic Narrators	111
Unreliable Narrators	112
The Question of Reliability in Barry Lyndon	117
Conclusion	127
Notes	131
Filmography	141
Bibliography of Works Cited	155
Index	161