

THE DARK JOURNEY

John Whiting as Dramatist

by
ERIC SALMON

'You see, my life-loving darling, the dark journey to the dark home is sometimes sweeter than the summer's day'

– Edward, in A Penny for a Song

BARRIE & JENKINS
COMMUNICA-EUROPA

Contents

Foreword	9
Preface	13
Acknowledgements	15
Chronology	17
Chapter 1	BIOGRAPHY AND BACKGROUND 21
Chapter 2	THE UNPUBLISHED NOVEL 42 Not a Foot of Land (1944-1945)
Chapter 3	BEGINNINGS OF DRAMATIC WRITING AND OTHER EARLY WORK (1946-1949) 78
	I No More A-Roving 78
	II The radio plays 95
	III Short stories and fragment of a novel 109
	IV The Conditions of Agreement 115
Chapter 4	THE CENTRAL PLAYS (1946-1955) 127
	I Saint's Day 127
	II A Penny for a Song 150
	III Marching Song 162
	IV The Gates of Summer 179
Chapter 5	THE INTERREGNUM (1955-1960) 199
	I Film scripts 199
	II A television play 213
	III Translations 218
	IV No Why 223
Chapter 6	RETURN TO THE THEATRE (1958-1963) 226
	I Noman 226
	II The Devils 234
	III Revision of A Penny for a Song 251
	IV The Nomads 254
Chapter 7	DRAMATIC CRITICISM AND ESSAYS 258
Chapter 8	CONCLUSIONS 271

CONTENTS

	Notes	281
Appendix 1	Variant endings of The Gates of Summer	291
Appendix 2	Letter from John Whiting to Peter Brook	308
Appendix 3	First productions of the plays	312
Appendix 4	The John Whiting Award	317
	Bibliography	318
	Index	321

(The dates given in the chapter headings above are the dates, as nearly as can be determined, of the writing of the plays and other works, not the dates either of production or publication. This is why a span of time is indicated in each case and why there is a great deal of overlapping between the separate periods shown. The question of the dates of individual plays is amplified in the text of the relevant chapter.)