

Table of Contents

Preface	vii
I. Introduction	1
II. Autobiographical Reflections and Self-Representations
1. Women's Lives in Twentieth-Century American Society.....	13
2. Integration of Women's Lives and Women's Texts	22
3. Representation in Women's Poetry	33
III. Sylvia Plath, Adrienne Rich, and Audre Lorde
1. Sylvia Plath; or, The Branches of the Green Fig Tree	46
1.1. Sylvia Plath: An All-American Life.....	52
1.1.1. The Dutiful Daughter	52
1.1.2. The Sexual Monster	66
1.1.3. The Perfect Mother.....	73
1.2. Sylvia Plath and Poetry: Writing Genres and Herself	80
1.3. Shattered and Sheeted Looking Glasses: Representation in Sylvia Plath's Poetry	86
1.3.1. "Mirror, Mirror on the Wall"	87
1.3.2. Her Body, Herself	98
1.4. Sylvia Plath's Posthumous Double: Censorship - Fact vs. Fiction	107

2. Adrienne Rich: "Ungrateful, insatiable, perhaps a monster"	117
2.1. Adrienne Rich: Liberation into Fragmentation	123
2.1.1. Heterosexuality, Androgyny, Lesbianism: The Search for a Sexual Identity.....	123
2.1.2. Of Motherhood.....	137
2.1.3. A Jewish Poet's Education: Her Father's Daughter	143
2.2. Poetry - "Carrier of the Sparks"	151
2.3. Smoky Mirrors: Representation in Adrienne Rich's Poetry	170
3. Audre Lorde: "Black Lesbian Feminist Warrior Poet Mother"	178
3.1. Audre Lorde and the Textures of Life	181
3.1.1. "Black Mother Woman"	181
3.1.2. Present, Past, and Future: The Search for an African American Identity	187
3.1.3. The Power of the Erotic	199
3.2. "Poetry Is Not a Luxury"	212
3.3. Individual or Communal Specula : Representation in Audre Lorde's Poetry	229
IV. Conclusion	239
Bibliography	247