

THE ORIGINS OF HISTORY

Herbert Butterfield

*Edited with an Introduction
by Adam Watson*

EYRE METHUEN · LONDON

Contents

	page
Introduction by Adam Watson	7
Preface	13
I The Origins of Historical Writing	17
1 Story Telling	17
2 Lists and Records	22
3 Disputes and Wars	29
4 First Interpretations	35
II The Annals of the Pre-classical Empires	44
1 Narratives of Events	44
2 Ancient Egypt	47
3 The Hittite Achievement	60
4 Mesopotamia	71
III The Originality of the Hebrew Scriptures	80
1 The Memory of the Exodus	80
2 God and History	84
3 The History of a Nation	89
4 Promise and Fulfilment	97
5 Exile and Return	109
6 Israel's Neighbours and their Past	114
IV The Rise of Classical Historiography	118
1 The Greek Attitude to History	118
2 The Cyclical View of Time	121

3	The Homeric Memory	126
4	'Scientific' History in Athens and Ionia	130
V	The Chinese Tradition of Historical Writing	138
1	The Origins of a Unique Achievement	138
2	The Early Classics	143
3	Confucius and After	151
VI	The Establishment of a Christian Historiography	158
1	The Changed Outlook of Judaism	159
2	Christian Accounts of Jesus	162
3	The Relation to the Old Testament	168
4	The Establishment of a Christian Interpretation of World History	172
5	The Conversion of Constantine: Eusebius	176
6	Augustine	180
VII	The Development of Historical Criticism	185
1	Pre-critical Sceptics in Europe	185
2	The Critical Reconstruction of the Past	192
VIII	The Great Secularisation	198
1	The Hand of God	198
2	The Mundane Approach	204
3	The Idea of Progress	211
4	Philosophies of History	215
	Appendix: A Chinese Historian – Ssŭ-ma Ch'ien	221
	Bibliography	231
1	Books	231
2	Articles, Introductions and Lectures	235
	Index	245