

Contents

Preface	page ix
List of abbreviations	xi
Introduction	xiii
Principal dates in Hooker's life and in the publication of his work	xxxix
Bibliographical note	xxxii
The text and notes of this edition	xxxv

Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity

A PREFACE. To them that seek (as they term it) the reformation of Laws, and orders Ecclesiastical, in the Church of ENGLAND.	I
1 The cause and occasion of handling these things, and what might be wished in them for whose sakes so much pain is taken.	I
2 The first establishment of new discipline by Mr. Calvin's industry in the Church of Geneva, and the beginning of strife about it amongst ourselves.	3
3 By what means so many of the people are trained into the liking of that discipline.	12
4 What hath caused so many of the learned sort to approve the same discipline.	20
5 Their calling for a trial by disputation.	26
6 No end of contention without submission of both parts unto some definitive sentence.	28
7 The matter contained in these eight books.	33
8 How just cause there is to fear the manifold dangerous events likely to ensue upon this intended reformation, if it did take place.	35
9 The conclusion of all.	49

THE FIRST BOOK. Concerning laws, and their several kinds in general.	52
1 The cause of writing this general discourse concerning laws.	52
2 Of that law which God from before the beginning hath set for himself to do all things by.	54
3 The law which natural agents observe, and their necessary manner of keeping it.	58
4 The law which the Angels of God obey.	64
5 The law whereby man is in his actions directed to the imitation of God.	66
6 Men's first beginning to understand that law.	68
7 Of man's will which is the first thing that laws of action are made to guide.	70
8 Of the natural finding out of laws by the light of reason to guide the will unto that which is good.	74
9 Of the benefit of keeping that law which reason teacheth.	85
10 How reason doth lead men unto the making of human laws, whereby politic societies are governed, and to agreement about laws whereby the fellowship or communion of independent societies standeth.	87
11 Wherefore God hath by scripture further made known such supernatural laws as do serve for men's direction.	100
12 The cause why so many natural or rational laws are set down in holy scripture.	107
13 The benefit of having divine laws written.	109
14 The sufficiency of scripture unto the end for which it was instituted.	112
15 Of laws positive contained in scripture, the mutability of certain of them, and the general use of scripture.	117
16 A conclusion, showing how all this belongeth to the cause in question.	120

THE EIGHTH BOOK. Their Seventh Assertion, That unto no Civil Prince or Governor there may be given such power of Ecclesiastical Dominion as by the Laws of this Land belongeth unto the Supreme Regent thereof. 128

1 An admonition concerning men's judgements about the question of regal power.	128
2 What their power of Dominion is.	139

Contents

---

3	By what <sup>1</sup> right, after what <sup>2</sup> sort, in what <sup>3</sup> measure, with what <sup>4</sup> convenience, and according to what <sup>5</sup> example Christian Kings may have it. In a word, their manner of holding Dominion.	140
4	Of the title of Headship which we give to the kings of England in relation unto the church.	158
5	Of their prerogative to call general assemblies about the affairs of the church.	176
6	Of their power in making ecclesiastical laws.	179
7	Of their power in making ecclesiastical governors.	200
8	Of their power in judgement ecclesiastical.	208
9	Of their exemption from judicial kinds of punishment by the clergy.	218
	 A Guide to Hooker's sources and to the Elizabethan debate about religion and society.	 227
	 Index of scriptural citations	 241
	Index of persons	243
	Subject Index	246