Introduction: Structure in Mind	1
1 Attention Regained	1
2 The Nature of Attention, and How It Shapes Consciousness	3
3 Attention and Philosophy	4
4 Methods	7
5 Reading Guide	9
Part I What Is Attention?
1 Beyond Brain Mechanisms: Attention Is a Subject-Level Phenomenon	13
1 The Scientific “Discovery” of Attention	13
2 The Folk-Psychological Matrix	14
3 The Scientific Matrix	18
4 What Is Attention?	21
5 Identifying Reductionism	23
6 Is Attention like Memory?	25
7 Why Reductionism Is Probably False: an Empirical Argument	27
8 Is “Attention” Just a Label?	32
9 Attention Is a Subject-Level Phenomenon	33
2 Attending: Why Attention Is a Mental Activity	38
1 The Central Phenomenon of Attention	38
2 Varieties of Attention	39
3 The Puzzle of Perceptual Agency	41
4 The Puzzle Solved	44
5 Voluntarism and Agential Intentionalism	46
6 What Follows from Voluntarism?	48
7 Are Activities Subject-Caused Events?	50
3 Activities: Temporal Shape and Guiding Form	52
1 Two Characteristics of Activities	52
2 Attention Is an Activity I: Temporal Shape	54
3 Changes in Attending	61
4 Structured Processes	63
5 Attention Is an Activity II: Guiding Form	66
4 Priority Structures: How Attention Organizes the Mind	70
1 Priorities and Mental Structure	70
2 Why the Priority Structure View?	72
3 Priority Structures: the Basics	74
4 Priority Systems	79
5 Attending to Something	82
6 Ways of Attending	85

7 Occupants of Attention	87
8 Constitutive Priority Structures	90
5 The What and Why of Priority Structures: Interpretation and Functional Role	92
1 Interpretation and Functional Role	92
2 How to Interpret Priority Structures	93
2.1 Priorities I: Reductionism or Primitivism?	93
2.2 Priorities II: Comparative or Absolute?	95
2.3 Psychological Parts: Propositional vs. Priority Partitioning	99
2.4 Priority Systems: Local or Global?	102
3 The Functional Role of Priority Structures	105
3.1 Information Pruning vs. Prioritizing	105
3.2 Prioritization and Behavioral Decoupling	108
3.3 Prioritization and Selection for Action	110
6 Psychological Salience: Passive Attention Guidance	114
1 The Passive Dynamics of Attention	114
2 Attention Guidance in the Posner Cuing Paradigm	115
3 Varieties of Passive Attention	117
4 Passive Attention Is Subject-Level Guided	119
5 Constraints on a Theory of Psychological Salience	122
6 The Imperative Account I: the Basics	126
7 The Imperative Account II: Update Rules for Priority Structures	129
8 The Imperative Account III: Salience Maps	131
9 Beyond Perception: How Passive Is Mind Wandering?	133
Appendix: Encapsulation and Motivational Penetrability	135
7 Executive Control: Active Attention Guidance	138
1 Active Attention: a Paradigmatic Mental Action	138
2 Deliberation, Judgment, and Choice	140
3 Goals, Plans, and Execution Strategies	142
4 Online Execution and Fine-Grained Attunement	146
5 Effortful Attention	148
6 Attention and Self-Control	149
 Part II Attention and Consciousness
8 Beyond Appearances: The Phenomenal Contributions of Attention	155
1 The Phenomenal Contributions of Attention	155
2 Can the Phenomenal Contributions of Attention Be Deflated?	157
3 Deflating the Deflationary View	158
4 How Attention Affects Appearances	160
5 The Appearance View	162
6 The Appearance View and Intentionalism	163
7 Phenomenal Uniqueness and Attentional Appearances	165
8 Attention Is Not like a Camera Lens	166
9 Why Probably No Attentional Appearance View Is Correct	171

10	The Replication Argument against the Appearance View	173
10.1	Replicability	174
10.2	Difference	177
10.3	Summary	180
	Appendix: Did Husserl Make a Similar Argument?	181
9	Phenomenal Structure: Center and Periphery—Fringe, Field, and Margin	183
1	Intelligible Perspectives	183
2	Structured Building	184
3	Priority and Centrality	186
4	Phenomenal Structure or Modes of Consciousness?	189
5	Centrality Systems: Center, Field, and Fringe	192
6	Phenomenal Structure in Conscious Thought	195
7	Center, Thematic Field, and Margin	198
8	Centrality Systems: Local or Global?	202
9	Phenomenal Holism?	203
	Appendix: Precursors	208
10	Phenomenal Salience: The Dynamics of Attention and the Flowing Stream	211
1	From Attentional Flow to the Flow of Consciousness	211
2	Felt Motivational Impact	213
3	The Contingent Capture Argument	216
4	Phenomenally Encoded Imperatives	221
5	Phenomenal Salience and the Flowing Stream	222
11	Awareness of Attending: Agentive Awareness and Introspective Knowledge	225
1	Outward Attention, Inward Awareness	225
2	Introspective Attention?	226
3	Agentive Awareness	229
4	Agentive Attention Awareness	232
5	A Pushmi-Pullyu Account of Agentive Attention Awareness	234
6	Introspective Knowledge of Attention	239
	Appendix: Extramission. Does Attention Stretch the Surrounding Air?	240
12	Necessity and Sufficiency: The Inconclusive Empirical Case for a One-Sided Dependency	243
1	Two Claims about the Relationship between Attention and Consciousness	243
2	The Many Sufficiency Claims	244
3	Against Focal Sufficiency	246
3.1	Blindsight	246
3.2	Masking	247
4	The Many Necessity Claims	249
5	Empirical Data on Priority System Necessity	251
5.1	Inattentive Blindness	252
5.2	Counterevidence?	254
5.3	Hemi-neglect	254
6	Phenomenal Consciousness or Accessible Phenomenal Consciousness?	257

13 The Perspectivity Picture: Why Attention Is Essential to Phenomenal Consciousness	259
1 Consciousness: Passive Encounter or Engaged Perspective?	259
2 Metaphysically Neutral Essence Claims	261
3 The Perspectivity Picture	263
4 Attention and Phenomenal Unity	266
5 Attention and Phenomenal Perspectivity	270
6 Attention and Phenomenal Subjectivity	276
7 Against Subtraction	280
8 Summary and Conclusion	282
Appendix: Attention, Phenomenal Unity, and Split Brains	283
Bibliography	285
Index	311
