1 Introduction	1
1.1 What is morphology?	1
1.2 Morphology in different languages	4
1.3 The goals of morphological research	6
1.4 A brief user's guide to this book	9
Summary of Chapter 1	11
Further reading	11
Comprehension exercises	12
2 Basic concepts	14
2.1 Lexemes and word-forms	15
2.2 Affixes, bases and roots	19
2.3 Morphemes and allomorphs	22
Summary of Chapter 2	27
Appendix. Morpheme-by-morpheme glosses	27
Comprehension exercises	29
Exploratory exercise	30
3 Rules	33
3.1 Morphological patterns	34
3.1.1 Affixation and compounding	34
3.1.2 Base modification	35
3.1.3 Reduplication	38
3.1.4 Conversion	39
3.1.5 Outside the realm of morphology	40

3.2	Two approaches to morphological rules	40
3.2.1	The morpheme-based model	41
3.2.2	The word-based model	46
	Summary of Chapter 3	54
	Further reading	54
	Comprehension exercises	55
	Exploratory exercise	56
4	Lexicon	60
4.1	A morpheme lexicon?	61
4.2	A strict word-form lexicon?	66
4.3	Reconciling word-forms and morphemes	70
	Summary of Chapter 4	75
	Further reading	75
	Comprehension exercises	76
	Exploratory exercise	77
5	Inflection and derivation	81
5.1	Inflectional values	81
5.2	Derivational meanings	86
5.2.1	Derived nouns	87
5.2.2	Derived verbs	88
5.2.3	Derived adjectives	89
5.3	Properties of inflection and derivation	89
5.3.1	Relevance to the syntax	90
5.3.2	Obligatoriness	92
5.3.3	Limitations on application	93
5.3.4	Same concept as base	93
5.3.5	Abstractness	94
5.3.6	Meaning compositionality	94
5.3.7	Position relative to base	95
5.3.8	Base allomorphy	96
5.3.9	Word-class change	96
5.3.10	Cumulative expression	98
5.3.11	Iteration	98
5.4	Dichotomy or continuum?	98
5.4.1	Inherent and contextual inflection	100
5.5	Inflection, derivation and the syntax-morphology interface	102
5.5.1	The dichotomy approach and split morphology	102
5.5.2	The continuum approach and single-component architecture	105
	Summary of Chapter 5	106
	Appendix. Notation conventions for inflectional values	107

Further reading	109
Comprehension exercises	110
Exploratory exercise	110
6 Productivity	114
6.1 Speakers' knowledge of productivity	114
6.2 Productivity, creativity and gradience	116
6.3 Restrictions on word-formation rules	117
6.3.1 Phonological restrictions	118
6.3.2 Semantic restrictions	119
6.3.3 Pragmatic restrictions	120
6.3.4 Morphological restrictions	120
6.3.5 Borrowed vocabulary strata	121
6.4 Productivity and the lexicon	122
6.4.1 Processing restrictions	123
6.4.2 Synonymy blocking	125
6.4.3 Productivity and analogy	127
6.5 Measuring productivity	129
Summary of Chapter 6	131
Further reading	132
Comprehension exercises	133
Exploratory exercise	134
7 Morphological trees	137
7.1 Compounding types	137
7.2 Hierarchical structure in compounds	142
7.3 Hierarchical structure in derived lexemes	144
7.4 Parallels between syntax and morphology?	147
Summary of Chapter 7	150
Further reading	150
Comprehension exercises	151
Exploratory exercise	152
8 Inflectional paradigms	156
8.1 Syntagmatic and paradigmatic relations in morphology	156
8.2 Inflection classes	158
8.2.1 Inflection class assignment	160
8.2.2 Relationship to gender	162
8.2.3 Inflection classes and productivity	163
8.3 Paradigmatic relations and inflection class shift	165
8.4 Inheritance hierarchies	167
8.5 Stems and Priscianic formation	172

8.6	Syncretism	174
8.6.1	Systematic versus accidental inflectional homonymy	174
8.6.2	Underspecification	176
8.6.3	Rules of referral	179
8.7	More form-meaning mismatches	180
8.7.1	Defectiveness	180
8.7.2	Deponency	182
8.8	Periphrasis	183
	Summary of Chapter 8	184
	Further reading	184
	Comprehension exercises	185
	Exploratory exercise	187
9	Words and phrases	189
9.1	Compounds versus phrases	190
9.2	Free forms versus bound forms	196
9.3	Clitics versus affixes	197
9.4	Lexical integrity	203
	Summary of Chapter 9	206
	Further reading	207
	Comprehension exercises	207
	Exploratory exercise	209
10	Morphophonology	211
10.1	Two types of alternations	211
10.2	The productivity of morphophonological alternations	217
10.3	The diachrony of morphophonological alternations	220
10.4	Morphophonology as phonology	222
10.5	Morphophonology as morphology	228
	Summary of Chapter 10	231
	Further reading	231
	Comprehension exercises	232
11	Morphology and valence	234
11.1	Valence-changing operations	234
11.1.1	Semantic valence and syntactic valence (argument structure and function structure)	234
11.1.2	Agent-backgrounding operations	237
11.1.3	Patient-backgrounding operations	240
11.1.4	Agent-adding operations: causatives	241
11.1.5	Object-creating operations: applicatives	242
11.1.6	General properties of valence-changing operations	243

11.2	Valence in compounding	245
11.2.1	Noun incorporation	245
11.2.2	V-V compound verbs	247
11.2.3	Synthetic nominal compounds	249
11.3	Transpositional derivation	253
11.3.1	Transposition and argument inheritance	253
11.3.2	Action nouns (V → N)	254
11.3.3	Agent nouns (V → N) and deverbal adjectives (V → A)	255
11.3.4	Deadjectival transposition (A → N, A → V)	256
11.4	Transpositional inflection	257
	Summary of Chapter 11	262
	Further reading	263
	Comprehension exercises	263
12	Frequency effects in morphology	265
12.1	Asymmetries in inflectional values	265
12.1.1	Frequent and rare values	265
12.1.2	The correlation between frequency and shortness	267
12.1.3	The correlation between frequency and differentiation	268
12.1.4	Local frequency reversals	270
12.1.5	Explaining the correlations	272
12.2	The direction of analogical levelling	273
12.3	Frequency and irregularity	274
	Summary of Chapter 12	276
	Further reading	277
	Comprehension exercises	277
	Exploratory exercise	278
	Key to comprehension exercises	281
	References	301
	Glossary of technical terms	318
	Language index	347
	Subject index	357
