

CONTENTS

Preface	ix
I. Aristotle on the Science of the Soul	I
1. Psychology as a Branch of Physics	3
2. Form and Function in the Aristotelian Soul	9
3. On Cognitivism in the Aristotelian Soul	18
II. The Canonical Theory of Imagination	23
1. The Canonical Text	24
2. Perception and Its Ingredients	30
3. Acquisition of [Re]presentational Structures	39
4. The Functional Incompleteness of Imagination	45
5. Functional Incompleteness and the Ingredients of Imagination	57
III. The Consistency of the Canonical Theory	64
1. Metaphorical versus Canonical Imagination	64
2. Reconciling Theory and Practice in De Anima III.3	71
3. The Decaying Sense Interpretation of Imagination	84
4. What Images Are Not	90
IV. The Relation between Thought and Imagination	100
1. Thought, Supposition, and Imagination	100
2. The Necessity of Images for Thought: A Restricted Version	109
3. A General Version of IM	113
4. Images, Perceptual States, and Thoughts	116
5. Distinguishing Thoughts and Images	122

6. The Mechanics of [Re]presentation in De Memoria	136
7. Language and Thought	141
V. The Mind	160
1. Mind as a Faculty: De Anima III.4	162
2. The Functional Organization of Mind: De Anima III.5	168
3. Mind and Nature	172
4. The Analogy between Productive Mind and Light	177
5. The Attributes of Productive Mind	181
6. De Anima III.5 and the “Paradoxes” of Thought	195
7. Thinking and the Object of Thought	202
VI. Human and Divine Mind	209
1. Thought and the Language of Divinity	209
2. Separatist Passages in De Anima	211
3. Mind as a Self-Mover	216
4. The Alleged Isomorphism of Productive and Divine Mind	220
5. The Supposed Sameness-in-Kind of Human and Divine Thought	229
6. The Human Mind as a [Re]presentational System	245
Appendix A: Post-Aristotelian Evidence for the Incompleteness Thesis	255
Appendix B: Apprehensive versus Autonomous Thinking	260
Appendix C: The Return of the Unmoved Mover	265
References	269
General Index	279
Index of Passages	287