

Contents

Introduction 1

Literacy processing: a simple view of a complex theory 5

1 Preventing reading and writing difficulties 9

Organising to prevent literacy difficulties 9

Intervening early to reduce literacy difficulties 14

A theory of literacy learning 16

Individual instruction 17

Acceleration 19

Daily intensive teaching 21

Getting down to detail 22

Reciprocal gains of reading and writing 22

Using the Reading Recovery teaching procedures 24

2 The shape of the child's series of Reading Recovery lessons 26

Designing the series of lessons 27

Predictions of progress 28

Roaming around the known 29

Moving into instruction: shift the responsibility for learning to the child 35

Developing independence 41

Building the foundations of a self-extending processing system 42

How children's behaviours change during a series of individual lessons 44

Changes teachers might observe during lessons 44

3 Learning to look at print 48

Foundational learning 49

Learning about direction 50

Locating what to attend to in print 55

Spatial layout 58

Expanding knowledge of print 59

Extending letter knowledge 62

Extending word knowledge 69

Learning how letters make up words 71

- 4 Writing continuous texts, stories and messages 77
  - Learning to compose and write messages 78
    - Composing a message or story 78
    - Writing the message or story 82
  - Ways of solving words for writing 86
    - Extending writing vocabulary 88
    - Hearing and recording sounds in words 92
    - Using known words to construct new words 104
  - Assembling cut-up stories and messages 106

- 5 Reading continuous texts, whole stories and information books 110
  - Reading books 111
    - Familiar reading 111
    - Reading a new book in every lesson 113
  - Phrasing in fast and fluent reading 121
  - Finding and using the information in print: developing the brain's activity on text 127
    - Attending to early processing 130
    - Self-monitoring 134
    - Cross-checking on information 135
    - Searching for and using information of all kinds 137
    - Self-correcting 139
  - Linking sound sequences to letter sequences: massive practice in text reading 142
  - Taking words apart while reading 146
    - Attending to words in isolation 155

- 6 Adjusting teaching for particular difficulties 165
  - When acceleration is compromised 165
  - Some specific teaching challenges 168
    - When it is hard to attend in sequence 171
    - When it is hard to hear sounds or see letters 174
    - When it is hard to remember 176
    - When strong skills block learning 179
    - When children are diagnosed with different problems 183

7 Discontinuing individual lessons: the school team monitors for continuing progress 186

Deciding when to discontinue individual teaching 189

Discontinuing the series of lessons 191

The school team monitors progress 192

Using literacy to build literacy 193

Appendix 1 197

Foundational literacy learning 199

Case studies of literacy processing 206

Reading Recovery instruction 211

Appendix 2 217

Observation Survey Summary Sheet 218

Observation Summary for Multiple Assessments 220

Recommendations for Discontinuing the Lesson Series before Final Assessment 221

Daily Lesson Record 222

Change Over Time in Known Writing Vocabulary 224

Weekly Record of Known Writing Vocabulary 225

Change Over Time in Text Level 226

Weekly Record of Known Reading Vocabulary 227

Endnotes 229

(In this book the small numbers are Endnote references.)

References 233

Additional reading 238

Index 240