

CONTENTS

List of Illustrations ix

Introduction 1

1 Austen for Americans, and for the World: Oscar Fay Adams, Critical Editor and Biographer 15

The first critical edition of Austen, in the guise of a schoolbook: Chapters from Jane Austen (1888/9) 17

The first critical biography of Austen: The Story of Jane Austen's Life (1891) 24

A visual record of Austen's England in the present day: "In the Footsteps of Jane Austen" (1893) and The Story of Jane Austen's Life, new edition (1896/7) 46

Remembering and forgetting "the American biographer of Miss Austen" 55

2 Canonizing "the giant Jane": William Dean Howells, Interpreter and Advocate 75

Haunted by Winifred Howells, aspiring author and troubled soul 77

"We love Jane Austen more and more": Howells family reading and Mildred Howells's illustrations 82

Elevating Austen among world novelists: "Editor's Study" (1889) 88

Austen the "great" and "modern": "Heroines of Nineteenth-Century Fiction" (1900) 91

Father and daughter literary pilgrims: "A Fortnight in Bath" (1906) and "Editor's Easy Chair" (1913) 101

Enthusiastic criticism: "A Conjecture of Intensive Fiction" (1916) and Introduction to Pride and Prejudice (1918) 106

3 Topaz Crosses Plus Treasures of Another Kind: Charles Beecher Hogan, Collector and Keeper of Reading Journals 125

A serious student begins recording his judgments and building his book collection 127

Acquiring the crosses 133

Early recognition as an Austen collector and scholar 138

Suffering through graduate study and marrying the “flour heiress” 142

A turn towards bibliography and a farewell to Austen scholarship 147

Two exhibitions in America and a dramatic donation in England 152

Afterlives of the crosses 156

4 A Labor of Love and Friendship: Alberta H. Burke, Averil Hassall, and the Building of a Transatlantic Austen Archive 171

How Alberta became a Janeite 174

A chance encounter on a train, and Averil’s contributions begin 175

“Not comedy but farce”: Averil reviews Emma, dramatized by Gordon Glennon (1944–5) 178

A wartime gift: Averil’s handbound Scrutiny article 180

Averil connects Alberta with English Janeites 184

“Written by the girls themselves”: Pride and Prejudice at the Holton Park School for Girls (1951) 186

A groundbreaking exhibition: The Jane Austen Festival at Frostburg (1951) 189

“Everyone would go home raging, if they really love JA”: Averil tracks adaptations in the 1950s–60s 194

“Titled old trouts . . . with monomanias about dear Jane”: amateurism, expertise, and the Jane Austen Society 200

Visualizing Austen’s world: artworks, “background materials,” and Joan Hassall’s illustrations 203

“The monument she would have wished”: Averil and Harry add to Alberta’s archive and ensure her legacy 208

Afterword: Jane Austen Anew 229

Bibliography 235

Index 249