

C O N T E N T S

	Page
CANAAN BEFORE THE IMMIGRATION OF THE ISRAELITES Archæology and geography, pp. 1—2. Canaanite peoples, pp. 3—6. Cultural conditions during the Amarna period; the petty kings and their Egyptian Overlord, pp. 6—11.	1—11
THE MAKING OF ISRAEL. HISTORY AND SOURCES Accounts of the Old Testament partly patriarchal, partly tribal immigrations, pp. 12—13. Historical value of patriarchal legends. Genesis and Book of Joshua only episodes of immigration, showing the conception of a later period; so also the account of the events centring round Mount Sinai, pp. 13—20. Immigration scattered. Nomadic life in Canaan, pp. 20—21. Fusion with Canaanites. Importance of monarchy and the great cities towards transformation of Israel, pp. 21—25. Sources, pp. 26—29.	12—29
TRIBE AND CITY. SOCIAL ORDER Systematic subdivision of Israel into tribes, families and fathers houses artificial, pp. 29—30. Origin of tribe irregular, through covenants and wanderings; geographical conditions. Significance vague; leaves no trace in the laws, pp. 30—40. The town and its community. Elders and their authority. New ruling classes. Clients. Labourers and slaves. Hetæras and fatherless, pp. 34—36.	29—46
THE FAMILY, THE FATHER'S HOUSE AND THE PEOPLE Tribe, family and father's house not sharply defined, pp. 46—47. Family defined from a qualitative point of view; every unity a family, meaning a common life; mishpāhā and eleph, pp. 47—50. The father's house is the family as denoting household, but otherwise identical with family;	46—60 sometimes denoting totality, pp. 51—54. "The people", 'am, also of family and other unities, in particular the nation, pp. 54—57. Brother, kinsman and fellow, pp. 57—60.

THE FORMATION OF THE FAMILY 60—81
 Marriage; husband and wife. The man centre of the household. pp. 60—64. Choice of wife; forbidden degrees of relationship; importance of marriage, pp. 64—70. Wife helper of husband; polygamy. Motherhood, pp. 70—74. Paternal and maternal kin, pp. 74—77. Levirate marriage, pp. 77—81.

THE PROPERTY OF THE FAMILY 81—96
 Property follows the family. Encroachments of monarchy and great cities, pp. 81—83. Lost property to be taken over by the nearest of kin; community of property no rule, pp. 83—85. Attempts to prevent social revolutions, pp. 85—89. Order of inheritance, pp. 89—96.

I.

THE SOUL, ITS POWERS AND CAPACITY

THE SOUL 99—181
 The soul not part of man, but man as a totality with a peculiar stamp. Other souls, pp. 99—100. Sensation and mental image, pp. 100—102. nephesh, rūach and lēbh denote the totality with its peculiar stamp; will the central element. Differentiation of the three terms. pp. 102—106. Thought determined by volition. directed towards action, pp. 106—108. To think is to appropriate a totality, pp. 108—109. Conception a totality manifesting itself in the detail, not closely defined, but determined by character. Capacity of characterization, pp. 109—112. Formation of sentences a formation of totalities. Nominal and verbal phrases; the latter governing the account. Verb tenseless. Perfect describes action as independent totality; imperfect describes it as preparatory and supplementary, pp. 113—115. Logical context subordination of other totalities. Logical particles denote phrases of collateral circumstances; no distinction made between phrases indicating reason, consequence, cause, simultaneity, further explanation and relative phrases, pp. 115—120. Character of description, pp. 120—123. Striving after totality and movement. Immediate sensation, pp. 123—125. Terms for thinking, pp. 125—126. Thinking practical. Wisdom, p. 127. Mental processes not successive. Action and result implied by the thought. Counsel, pp. 128

—131. Responsibility of the man. Perception containing matter. Action manifestation of mental unity, pp. 132—133.

Dreams realities, possibly manifestations of action not yet carried into effect. Responsibility for dreams. Joseph, pp. 133—137. Truth of dream depending upon mental force of dreamer, pp. 138—140. Vision analogous with dream. Visions of prophets before the war. Micaiah ben Imlah, pp. 140—145.

The soul an organism with centre of force, pp. 145—146. Craving to be filled, pp. 146—149. The soul emptied, destroyed, pp. 149—151. Soul and life. Life tantamount to activity and manifestation, not differing from soul, pp. 151—156. Transformation of soul, pp. 156—157. Prophets. Ecstatic state and outward manifestations. Visions of prophet and valiant deeds of hero, pp. 157—162. Disruption and sending out of the soul, pp. 162—164.

Communication of soul, pp. 165—166. The force of a word dependent upon the contents of the soul, pp. 167—168. "Symbolic" actions and tokens, pp. 169—170.

The body outward expression of the soul; its individual parts are the soul. Spirit, heart, blood, bones, bowels, reins, liver, head, eyes, face, pp. 170—176. Flesh and spirit, i. e. weakness and strength; flesh is soul, pp. 176—179. Death a weakening of the soul, pp. 179—180. Relation towards dead bodies, p. 181.

THE BLESSING 182—212

berākhā is the power to live, varying according to the character of the soul, p. 182. Expressed in "counsel", p. 183. David type of him whose blessing increases, Saul of him who loses the blessing. Their mutual relation, pp. 183—190. The patriarchs bearers of the blessing. Jacob in house of Laban, pp. 190—192. The blessing inherited, communicated to surroundings, pp. 192—193. God is with the blessed, imparts strength to his soul, pp. 194—195.

Efficiency and power to succeed, pp. 196—197. Wisdom and understanding, pp. 198—199. The man rich in blessing, bārūkh, hands down the blessing as the property of his family; it is communicated to his sons, pp. 199—200. To bless is to impart mental power, pp. 200—201. Blessing communicated in gifts and greeting; necessary at meeting and parting; must be mutual, pp. 202—204.

Power of blessing propagation; by its means the soul grows, pp. 204—207. The blessing of women, pp. 207—208. Wealth and fertility, pp. 209—211. Success in war and rule, pp. 211—212.

HONOUR AND SHAME	213—244
Honour the contents and value of the soul, p. 213. Job's conception of honour: to be the one who gives and who counsels, pp. 213—216. Gideon and Jephthah: to carry others by counsel and deed. Honour must be fought for, the Bedouins' ideal of honour. Samson, pp. 216—223. The old idea of honour harmonious. Later a despotic type; Canaanite influence, pp. 223-226.
Honour expressed in the body. Clothing, pp. 226—228. Property, p. 228. Honour "weight" of the soul, kābhōdh , strength, hayil , is created by blessing, pp. 228—230. Honour individual. Woman's honour, pp. 230—232. Lack of chivalry towards women, pp. 232—233.
The weaker yields honour to the strong, increases his greatness. Praising. Gifts, pp. 234—236. Terms for honour, pp. 237—238. Honour is soul, pp. 238—239.
Shame is defeat, lack of blessing, pp. 239—241. Encroachment upon the body, pp. 241—242. Humiliation before others, p. 243. Demands for the shaming of the enemy, pp. 243—244.

NAME	245—259
Name the soul with its blessing and honour, p. 245. Name acts, p. 246. To speak and act in one's name, pp. 246—247. Name is renown, i. e. the achievement of the soul. Achievement creates name. The tower of Babel, pp. 247—249. Name and property, p. 250. Name pillars, p. 250—252. Giving of name; changing of name, pp. 252—253. The man bears the name of his fathers, pp. 253—254. Progeny identical with name, p. 254. Extermination of name, pp. 255—256. Memory, pp. 256—257. Community of name makes community of soul. Adoption, pp. 257—258. Firstborn the greatest share of name of father, pp. 258—259. Name common property of family, p. 259.

II.

COMMON LIFE AND ITS LAWS

PEACE AND COVENANT	263—310
The soul must live in community and share blessing with others. Solitude a misfortune, p. 263. Community and harmony called shālōm , peace, properly speaking totality; community of will. Its dissolution in the great cities, pp. 263—265. Peace within family. Breach of peace. Family a psychic unity, pp. 265—269. Individual involves "house", pp. 269—275. Community of town and people, pp. 275—276. Community through the generations. Fathers' share in fate of successors, pp. 276—278.

Covenant of friendship. David and Jonathan; conflict between pact of kin and pact of friendship, pp. 278—284. Relation between shālōm and berith, p. 285.

Covenant the presupposition of life and action. Excludes conflict; mutual security, pp. 285-287. Union of souls by covenant more or less intimate. Its striving after expansion. Gen. 34, pp. 287—291. Common responsibility of covenanters, p. 292. Covenant not placing parties on equal footing. Right to demand, pp. 293—296.

The gift is a communication of soul; necessary between members of same covenant, pp. 296—298. Art of life to give gifts. Abraham, Jacob and Esau, pp. 298—301. Gifts between master and vassal, pp. 301—302. Exchange of weapons and clothes; bodily touch, handshake, kisses, pp. 302—303. To bless each other is to give each other peace. Peace and blessing belong together, pp. 303—304.

Making of covenants by hand shaking, kisses, meals, because the covenant manifests itself in these, pp. 304—306. Momentary, separate covenants; can be very intimate, pp. 306—307. Covenant can be deposited into a stone, pp. 307—308.

Dissolution of covenant dissolution of common life and the soul; the covenant having its roots in divine forces and being made in holy places; the gods are in the union, pp. 308—309. Creating right and duty. Love the basis of all common life; feeling of kinship. To love one's neighbour, pp. 309—310.

PEACE AND SALVATION 311—335

Peace the entirety of the soul; not contrast of war, but victory, expansion, pp. 311—312. Comprises happiness and harmony with others, pp. 312—314. To be inviolate. Health of the body; long life. Fertility, pp. 314—316.

Weight later on attached to unchecked growth, pp. 316—317. Enemies exterminated or entirely subjected, pp. 317—320. Demand for security, pp. 320—322. Abolition of war presupposes uncontested rule of Israel, pp. 322—325. Wild beasts are to be made away with or become tame, pp. 325—326. Rest the ideal; the curse of labour; great profit claimed, pp. 326—327. To die in peace. Life of man like life of plant. Peace opposite of fight and strenuous effort, pp. 328—329.

Salvation properly speaking "spaciousness", expansion: not negative, salvation implies victory, p. 330. To save is to impart strength. The chief the saviour, pp. 330—331. Salvation more momentary than peace; denotes all happiness, contrast of trouble, pp. 332. Transformed to mean unchecked growth; Psalm 91. All evil to be done away with. Abolition of death, pp. 332—334. Salvation never deliverance from corporeal life; earthly happiness, pp. 334—335.

RIGHTEOUSNESS AND TRUTH 336—377

Righteousness the health of the soul. To be whole, pure, firm, straight means to act in accordance with the essence of the soul, pp. 336—337. Righteousness, sedhek, denotes the normal, implies strength, p. 338. Also truth is the power to maintain oneself, pp. 339—340. Presupposes the covenant. Righteousness and truth like love maintenance of covenant. Maintenance of self and covenant, power and will in one, pp. 340—342. Claim of justice depends upon position within covenant; demand of the weak for assistance, demand of the strong for honour. Mutual acknowledgment, pp. 342—345. He who does not fulfil the covenant towards the other becomes unjust towards him. To justify is to re-establish the covenant and restore to normal conditions, pp. 345—347. To "make true", i. e. faithful, is to acknowledge the man, pp. 347—348.

To judge is to maintain the covenant in outward as well as in inward relation, to give to everyone his just claim, pp. 348—349. Whole of life a "judging", mishpat; it denotes the kind and habit of the soul, right and duty, the standard of its behaviour, pp. 349—351. Essentially tantamount to sedhek. Constantly to be created in social life, pp. 351—352.

Law an expression of rights and duties given with the covenant. Not enforced from without, but identical with character of soul, pp. 352—353. Law of kinship. Respect for the totality of the man. Compassion towards the weak. Clients, pp. 353—358.

Justice the force creating blessing. Goodness and happiness of the righteous parallel manifestations of health. "Wholeness" both righteousness and happiness, pp. 358—359. Righteousness victory; peace and salvation. Fertility, pp. 359—360. Not an abstract claim, but to give and take according to one's ability and position in the covenant, pp. 360—361. The "way" is the quality and destiny of the soul; the two belong together. Presupposition: the justice of God, pp. 361—362.

Problem of Book of Job. In Job's community peace and blessing, upheld by righteousness of Job. Job does not demand happiness, but his righteousness, which has unrighteously been taken away. He does not deny having transgressed, though only minor transgressions. God has not fulfilled the claims of the covenant, is unrighteous. Job demands judicial proceedings, so that he may be reinstated into his righteousness, pp. 363—367. Righteousness kernel of values of life. must not be relinquished. As the harmony rests in God the conflict unsolvable, pp. 367—368. Friends deny conflict; they are dogmatics, refer to traditions. They deny validity of human justice, still maintaining that justice follows the righteous; internal contradiction. Job demands acknowledgment of justice and natural development of health, pp. 368—371. God's speech not comprehensive solution; maintains the greater horizon of God; his righteousness passes beyond that of man, not denying it. The righteousness of God and man not always in harmony, yet God is always just, pp. 372—373.

Righteousness gradually becomes a certain conduct and devotion to God; God is to do all, pp. 374—375. Social conditions contribute towards transformation, pp. 375—376. Attempt at individualism, p. 376. Conception of happiness as the natural development of the soul is lost. Happiness reward, pp. 376—377.

MAINTENANCE OF JUSTICE 378—410

Breach of integrity of the man to be atoned. Blood-vengeance in the olden times reparation, supplying breach as among Arabians. Gideon, Lamech, Samson, pp. 378—382. Revenge not only for manslaughter, also for curse. Shimei, pp. 382—383. The family of the violator solidary, must atone; 2 Sam. 21, pp. 383—385. Revenge demanded by the father's house; within that a contradiction in terms. Fratricide, pp. 385—386. Revenge must not violate covenant. Joab and Abner, pp. 387—388.

Blood shed demands revenge on slayer; vengeance gets satisfaction, pp. 388—389. Vengeance just claim of family, carried out by gō'ēl, the nearest of kin, p. 390. gō'ēl maintainer of life and property of family, also when a relation is made a slave. The responsibility rests with the family and its instinct of self-preservation, pp. 390—392.

Law of retaliation abstract, presupposes legal state; Babylonian origin, adopted by Israel together with law of restoration, pp. 392—393. Various currents make the two principles approach one another. Limitation of right of avenger, essential that the unrighteous is struck down in consequence of his act, totality, pp. 393—394. Abstract theory of retribution not entirely carried through, as legal state is lacking. Restitution for the person violated, p. 395.

Laws regarding manslaughter. Cities of refuge. Mixture of retaliation and restoration. The law of retribution forbids settling murder with fine; manslaughter sin. Sons of slayer must not be put to death, pp. 395—399. Penal sum a reparation and ransom, p. 399.

Laws of the Book of Covenant on bodily injuries penetrated by the spirit of Hammurabi, but modified by social conditions of Israel; also related to Hittite and, in lesser degree, to Assyrian law, pp. 400—402. Laws regarding theft more closely related to Hittite law than to Babylonian and Assyrian laws, pp. 402—405. Different principles of the old societies, pp. 405—406.

Organized courts of law like those of Babylonia lacking. Oaths. Family and town solidary. Deut. 21. Witnesses. Hypothetical curse, pp. 406—408. Inner authority of judge. Priest or prophet. Judge puts his authority into the one he declares to be right and thus increases his righteousness, pp. 408—409. Help looked for with the mighty. Therefore the king judge, pp. 409—410. Striving after organized courts of law, p. 410. Expulsion of great criminals, p. 410.

SIN AND CURSE 411—452

Sin opposite of righteousness, caricature of normal action. Sinner lacks firm centre of action, p. 411. Falsehood splitting of soul, denial of its contents; hollow and powerless; sheker and kāzābh, pp. 411—413. shāw' the empty illusion, same as chaos, tōhū, pp. 413—414. Falsehood typical sin, this being a dissolution of the soul, hardness, stiffness, want of love; hū', 'āwōn, pesha', pp. 414. Sin breach of integrity of soul; breach of covenant. Determined by the kind of covenant. Saul and David. Shimei and David, pp. 415—417. Any kind of dissolution of community sin, p. 417. Sins in relation to others. Disease in the soul of the sinner acts against its essence. Violence, pp. 417—419. Small and great sins, p. 420. Blood offence a poison in the soul of perpetrator of violence, must lead to ruin. Abimelech. Ahab, pp. 420—423. David's care to liberate his family from "blood", pp. 423—425. The fear of blood guilt, p. 425. Sacrilege. Sins which require extermination in order to remove contamination from the kinsmen. Stoning and burning, pp. 425—428.

To "unjustify" is to weaken. The sinner cannot maintain himself. He is barren, perishes, pp. 428—430. His seeming strength is unnatural, may be due to witchcraft, negative strength. 'āwen, beliya'al, eager to hurt, pp. 430—432.

Misfortune punishment, but originally not arbitrary, follows the psychological law; sin identical with misfortune, pp. 432—433. Demand that Yahweh should kill sinner, p. 434. Sin gradually centres in disobedience, thus Gen. 3, p. 435. Natural relation between sin and misfortune modified. Theorizings on measuring out of punishment, pp. 435—437.

Curse dissolution of the soul; devours the blessing and undermines the power to live, p. 437. Deut. 28; the cursed rootless, unable to act, lacks honour, blessing and peace, pp. 437—441.

Curse and sin belong together, but curse can be put into the soul from without, p. 441. Power of the uttered curse, most active against sinners, but always a danger; curses of strong souls, pp. 441—442. The curse spreads to the surroundings, is counteracted by the blessing, pp. 442—443.

Disease and misfortune a result of sin or curse, p. 443. Psalms of penitence and suffering; Ps. 6; 38; 32, pp. 443—445. Suffering isolates from friends, p. 446. "Enemies" in the Psalms sometimes enemies from without, sometimes unrighteous rulers, most frequently personal enemies. Suffering due to their curses, called forth by magic arts, pp. 446—450. The sufferer defends himself with curses against them, pp. 450—451. Degrees of curse, partly entire dissolution and separation from community ('ārar), partly weakening of the power to live (killēl, hēkal), pp. 451—452.

WORLD OF LIFE AND DEATH 453—496

The world falling into three parts like that of the Babylonians, p. 453. Earth basis of life; 'adhāmā, the land of man, is the land of blessing, p. 454. Counterpart: desert-land; Arabian and Israelitic conception, pp. 454—455. Desert-land: land of curse and chaos, pp. 455—456. Land of curse no definite frontier line, to be found in patches in the land of man, cropping up wherever blessing is lacking, pp. 456—457. shēmāmā, desert, means the land of curse; land of man to be maintained by man maintaining blessing, pp. 457—460.

The land of the grave also the enemy of the good land, p. 460. The grave and Sheol; not different, Sheol the primeval grave, pp. 461—462. Grave partly good, partly home of evil, p. 462. Borrowing of Babylonian conception of ocean. Ocean and Sheol, pp. 463—464. Darkness pertains to non-world, light to world of blessing, pp. 464—466. The sinful and the cursed are in Sheol; also in the ocean. Restoration of health deliverance from Sheol, pp. 466—470.

Israelitic conception of universe expression of conflict between life and death, p. 470. Myths express the creation of land of man from desert-land and chaos; Yahweh's fight against chaos waters; fight against dragons; expresses victory of blessing over evil; genesis of world of life. Ocean must serve the blessing, pp. 471—474.

Relation of people to the land as that of family to property. Land of fathers, pp. 474—475. People a psychic whole; their life together with the fathers; fathers' history that of the people, pp. 475—476. Creation of land of man coinciding with that of people; exile of people revival of chaos and desert, pp. 476—477. Relation to other peoples and their world, pp. 477—479.

The earth a living thing; its soul must be respected, the year of sabbath, pp. 479—480. Division of animals. Tame animals known by the Israelites. Right of wild beasts, pp. 480—482. Clean and unclean animals; historically determined, pp. 482—483. Man not permitted to eat all parts of animals, in particular not the blood; would destroy totality of man and life of the animal species, pp. 483—484. Man master of animals. Right of wild beasts limited, pp. 484—485. Significance of species; its purity is to be maintained; mixtures impermissible, pp. 485—486. Plants, p. 486.

Celestial bodies guardians of light, belong to world of light, p. 487. Sun and moon govern time. Time is the development of events, action and fate. Times of same substance identical; time alive, pp. 487—488. Centres of time. Periods determined by their substance; totalities grouping round certain days (mō'ēdh), pp. 488—490. History generations (dōrōth), times with certain men as centres. Fused into eternity, i. e. primeval time ('ōlām), pp. 490—491.

The world is kept clean by normal conduct of life. Individual acquisition of Israelitic custom, pp. 491—492. Circumcision initiation into manhood, p. 492. Uncleaness breach of totality, closely allied to sin; must be kept out, pp. 492—493. Death makes unclean. Mourning rites expression of sorrow and fear of hurting the blessing; used at deaths and in misfortune. pp. 493—495. The violent death; the death in peace. Union with kinsmen, pp. 495—496.
