

∞ Contents ∞

Acknowledgments	vii
Introduction	1
One ∞ “They believe that children born at midnight have a mysterious nature, are closer than others to the spirit world, are more visited with dreams and apparitions.”	7
Two ∞ “What woman would not secretly consent to live on an altar, mute and veiled, to breathe the pure incense of sacrifice?”	22
Three ∞ “This need for exclusiveness, this need to be loved totally, has dominated all the feelings of my life.”	39
Four ∞ “Alas, alas, where to find again such flights, such madness?”	55
Five ∞ “You need wide horizons, the infinite, the boundless and the unforeseen, whereas I need rules, a full program, the feeling of doing my duty, a set pace.”	72
Six ∞ “Daniel. It was the name I had given to one of my children, the name of the prophet saved from the lion’s den. Among all the Bible stories, that one pleased me most.”	89
Seven ∞ “Nonnenwerth, the tomb of my chimeras, of my ideal life, the ashes of my hopes!”	105

Contents

Eight ∼ “The people is an eternal poet, in whom nature and passion inspire spontaneously touching beauties that art only painstakingly reproduces through grandiose effects.”	120
Nine ∼ “All direct action, all participation in public affairs being by custom denied to women, celebrity is for them only a vain and irritating excitation, a resounding isolation.”	137
Ten ∼ “I have taken more care than necessary in order to be always exact; my research has been minute, even in what concerns inconsiderable persons and facts.”	151
Eleven ∼ “I love politics. It is for me the greatest of the arts: architecture with the building blocks of knowledge.”	168
Twelve ∼ “Differently, but as completely as man, woman is created with a view to rational activity, whose principle is freedom, whose aim is progress, and whose exercise, within a society perpetually being transformed, cannot be arbitrarily circumscribed or determined.”	187
Thirteen ∼ “When a woman has created her life herself, and that life has not been governed by the common rules, she becomes in everyone’s eyes responsible for it, more responsible than a man.”	206
Fourteen ∼ “I have never felt entirely French or entirely German but apart, isolated, somewhat foreign as well in the country where I was born as in that where destiny had me live.”	226
Envoi	246
Notes	249
Sources	273
Index	277

Illustrations appear after page 136